Tradition...

"Prick me, I bleed black and gold. If anyone needs a little tradition, a little spirit, they can come get a pint from me," said Ms. Vikki Widgren, teacher and 1965 Warren graduate. "Tradition gives us, as a school, a sense of who we are and motivates us to do our best and to keep setting examples for everyone who comes after us."

When what we now know as Warren first opened its doors in 1924, a group of less than 100 Warriors roamed the hallways and from this seemingly microscopic population the Warrior spirit emerged. These students helped to develop the first traditions Warriors ever celebrated and by the early 1960s these traditions were ingrained in the school's history.

On the first day of school a group of seniors would pack the science staircase and "deliver" unsuspecting sophomores, who just happened to be headed downstairs, to the first floor. And at the end of the year, each senior would come to school with a pocket full of pennies ready to pay the lunch lady for his or her meal. Although we no longer celebrate these traditions, they helped shape Warren into the school we've all come to love and undoubtedly influenced the traditions we celebrate today.

"When I first started teaching at Warren, I was really upset that a lot of the traditions I had celebrated were no longer recognized," Ms. Widgren recounted.

"However a lot of the new traditions involve really good, positive interaction between staff and students." For example, the popular Lip Sync contest hosted by the Student Council now includes a panel of teacher judges and during the homecoming celebrations the "lucky" teacher who receives the most student votes must kiss some kind of animal.

Whether the celebrations involve old or new traditions, the Warrior spirit continues - every Friday morning the band plays in the commons, on game days Warriors come to school decked out in Warrior wear, and every Homecoming and Winterfest week students come dressed in a wild array of homemade outfits.

"I hope Warriors never lose their spirit because that's the one thing that never changes. Even when I went to Warren, you never missed a game, a dance, or any of the events; they were the center of our lives," Ms. Widgren said. "However, I don't think that will happen because as I see more and more grads return to these halls, I have no doubt that tradition does not end with graduation."

AS WARRIORS TODAY battle their way through the halls during passing periods, it's hard to imagine that Warren's first graduating class consisted of only 21 students. Warren's construction was completed during the winter of 1924 and it officially opened its 16 classroom facility in January 1925. Warren has since undergone drastic reconstruction and remodeling; the WCC was added in 1976 and the newest addition, the Freshmen Academy was completed just last year.

Behind the scene action brings homecoming together

Homecoming was not just about dressing up crazy and unique for each spirit day and showing up for events for juniors Chrissie Johnson and Lindsay Ward, it was much more than that. They spent months planning the events with the other officers and advisors to make sure everything was planned, and every detail was worked out so everything would run smoothly.

Lindsay, as well as helping with other activites, helped Senior Nick Coffing in the planning of the Star Search competition.

They had to audition and pick participants, get judges and hosts for star search and they also had to plan each time slot out so the show went off perfectly.

"There were a few acts that weren't so great. One person came in and started to sing and I circled zero on my judges sheet after the first line of the song, it was bad." one judge said. "But I felt bad afterwards because they probably saw me circle it and probably made them more nervous."

Other acts included more out-of-tune singers, out-of-step dancers, and bad jokes. Also in the crowd of the many participants who tried out were the stars.

"It was hard to narrow it down in some cases. I had respect for everyone because I know it's hard to perform in front of people," Lindsay said.

As officers of student council Lindsay and Chrissie were both required to participate in all the homecoming activites during the week.

"I would have participated in homecoming even if I wasn't required to do it," Chrissie said.

"I think homecoming is a more memorable experience when you get involoved, and its just a lot of fun!" Lindsay added.

They enjoyed watching the things that they had been working on for weeks come together and they had fun watching everyone participate, as well as participate themselves with the spirit days.

Lindsay and Chrissie did everything from brainstorming the theme "Cereal Champions," decorating the school, getting things heated up at the bonfire, and supporting the football team. Then they danced their hearts out on the night of the dance after realizing the week was a huge success.

"Although it was stressful to plan homecoming week," Chrissie said, "it was all worthwhile seeing it all come together so well in the end."

Then and Now

Tradition never graduates

"Of course I participated in every homecoming activity when I went to Warren," Mr. Jeff Massey said, a 1986 Warren graduate.

It doesn't matter if you went to Warren in the 80s like Mr. Massey, now a counselor at Warren, or if you are currently enrolled at Warren, a Warrior is still a Warrior.

During homecoming week in Mr. Massey's days, the students had as much school spirit as we do now. The theme "let's go crazy-Warrior style" of 1986 gave way in showing school spirit. Some of the dress up days included mismatch day, twin day, nerd day, and they even had toga day, very similar themes to this year's homecoming.

But one day that has never changed is Friday, black and gold spirit day, the day where it is tradition and will remain tradition for Warriors to go all out in their black and gold "Warrior Wear." Students not only wear black and gold or their Warren t-shirts but some go all out wearing ribbons, face paint. Even some go further still by wearing a warrior head dress.

Although the tradition of Warrior pride during homecoming hasn't changed much, some of the activities have. In 1986, they had powder puff football, where girls would put on the football uniforms and take on their own version of Warrior domination. Another tradition that has changed over the years is the float decorations for each class, where students would spend several hours each night putting together a float, in hope that the other classes wouldn't sabotage it too much while they weren't around. The floats were pulled around the track at the football game, where today we just decorate a "float" for people to look at.

Another event that has changed was "homely coming," where guys would take a walk down the runway in their own version of a beauty pagent.

"We also had pep rallies, back when we didn't have freshmen, and the school wasn't as big so it was easier to do," Mr. Massey said.

Even though Warren has grown in number, and can't throw pep rallies all the time, we still continue the tradition of the bonfire and Warriors have no problem getting pumped up at the tailgating parties by painting their chests or dressing up to keep up the traditions.

"I enjoy working here because of the school's tradition. It creates a positive school environment," Massey said, "I'd put our student body up against any other school in school spirit, anytime."

On the Job

Jordan Adair
Drives the Zamboni

Jordan Adair glides around the rink, driving the Zamboni to smooth the ice at the downtown skating rink, Indiana World Skating Academy, where he has worked for three years.

"It gets repetitive. Driving the Zamboni around is not as fun as everyone thinks," he said.

His work schedule is usually Wednesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday from early afternoon until closing time. His pay is $8 an hour.

Jordan got this job through his cousin who was already a skateguard at the same skating rink. He also started as a skateguard and moved up through jobs and as he got older. Now 18, his official tasks are in Operations.

"My jobs include learning how to fix things around the rink, driving the Zamboni, cleaning the halls and taking compressor logs," he said.

"I wrecked the Zamboni once. The first time I was driving it, I hit the gas instead of the brake and slammed into some glass doors. It shattered the glass. I was worried about getting in trouble but I didn't." Jordan said.

"Overall, I like my job, except that some customers can be rude and demanding and complain about the condition of the ice," Jordan said.

Keith Porter
Works as a security guard

Senior Keith Porter, age 18, has been working as a security guard since August for such places as Conseco Fieldhouse, Victory Field, and the Convention Center. During a typical day of work, he works the gates checking bags and coats, making sure outside food doesn't get in, and even checking for weapons.

Keith got the job through his father, who had previously worked security there as well. His dad set up the interview for him, and Keith took it from there. He had previously worked at Suncoast Video in Castleton.

"I like working security a lot better," Keith said. Keith gets $7 per hour.

"The job isn't hard, the only thing that's kind of tough is you have to stand up a lot," Keith said. The workers typically get one ten-minute break each night they work.

Just like in every job, Keith encounters quite a few difficulties working security.

"We typically get two kinds of drunk people; funny drunks and scary drunks. You definitely get some weird people there," Keith said.

According to Keith, the busiest time for security workers is during the Pacer season. That's because of the large amounts of people who come to watch the games. With the greater amounts of people, comes greater responsibilities for security workers.

"Where a kid can be a kid," is the phrase senior Courtney Ware lives by while working at Chuck E. Cheese. Courtney works to make sure every kid has fun and can forget about all responsibilities and truly be a kid. She has been working there for two years.

Her work schedule is usually Friday, Saturday, and Sunday. Her pay is $5.60 an hour. During working hours, Courtney works in the gameroom and works as a birthday party hostess.

"I do pretty much everything except dressing up as Chuck E. and working in the kitchen," she said.

Courtney got the job through one of her friends who already worked at Chuck E. Cheese. She walked in and asked if they were hiring, filled out an application and got hired on the same day.

"My favorite part of the job is dancing in front of people, and I enjoy playing and interacting with the kids at the games," she said.

Although Courtney has a lot of fun while she is working, by playing games with the kids and dancing, she also has to remember work isn't always fun and games.

"My most proud and memorable moment at work was when I won employee of the month for January 2004," Courtney said.

Free Time

Activities become a weekly tradition

"It's comforting to know that my friends and I will always have at least an hour together each week. There is never a dull moment when we get together and their craziness really helps me unwind after a stressful day; however, our lives are so hectic with school, work, band and preparing for college that our weekly dinner is really the only time we have with one another," senior Darriel Jones said.

Like many Warriors, Darriel was faced with the challenges of balancing her school and work responsibilities with her equally important social life. However, her conflicting obligations soon presented an opportunity and like most Warriors, Darriel seized the chance to spend more time with her friends. Every Tuesday the Honors Band saxophone players must attend a mandatory sectional from 4:30 to 5:30 and after practice they are given an hour break before they must return to school for a two-and-a-half hour full band rehearsal.

"After one sax sectional, my friends Sarah McMillan [senior] and Cordierro Richardson [junior] were really hungry and didn't have the time or motivation to go all the way home and grab a quick bite to eat, only to immediately head back to band. So we all decided to go to Steak n' Shake; we had a blast and ever since it has been our weekly tradition to grab something to eat and relax between the two rehearsals," Darriel said.

And while Darriel and her friends guaranteed time together to talk about family, school and life in general by squeezing a Tuesday night dinner into their tight schedules, Warriors have also adopted numerous other traditions. Seniors Brian Clampitt, Blake Harrison, and their friends met at Movies 8 every Tuesday to catch up and watch a cheap movie.

"On Mondays during first period, one of us brings in the newspaper clipping of Movies 8's play list and we choose a movie and time. Sometimes the movies are really bad, and generally we expect them to be. But we don't go every week for the movie; it's just time to relax and have some fun with my friends before we all have to leave for college," senior Brian Clampitt said.

And although most students must squeeze in a few minutes finishing (or starting) homework before each class because many jobs demand that they arrive promptly at 3:00 and work until close, leaving only enough time to eat a semi-nutritious dinner before collapsing into bed, Warriors always find time for their friends.

Stonybrook seventh-grader Shané Penney stood alone center stage of the PAC staring at a packed auditorium waiting to say her first lines as JoJo. The music began and her curiosity began the show, "Now that is a very unusual hat. I wonder what's under a hat such as that...Or a sort of a kind of a hat-wearing ...cat!"

This year's "Seussical the Musical" took a lot of effort for the cast. Senior James Victery as the Cat in the Hat narrarted and became a part of each scene. Shané Penny as Jo Jo lived on the Planet of Whos and was known for her famous "Yopp." But the character who played one of the most vital parts in the musical was Brandon Arnold as Horton the Elephant who found the planet of Who and was determined to save it even though the others thought he was crazy for thinking the Whos existed and they did everything they could to stop him from saving the Whos.

Brandon may have enjoyed playing Horton, but it was not as easy as simply playing a role of the hero of the Whos. It took much more than simply going on stage and saying a few lines. For example, long rehearsals every night to memorize their lines and perfect their own songs.

"Rehersals were fun even though they were long and took much dedication," Brandon said.

During practice they rehearse all the songs and getting them in tune and on time. The cast also had to learn all the choreography, during the hours of practice to make the show perfect.

"It's really pressuring but a lot of fun because we have the most lines and songs and if we dont't know them, the show won't be good," Brandon said.

In the middle of chaos, was a place to easily find yourself during practices and performances with a cast of 40 plus charcters, but it was also a good time for Brandon to interact with the many other talented students involved and find new friends.

"My favorite person to work with was Jessica Murphy," Brandon said, "It was an incredible honor just being able to act and sing with someone with so much talent."

Importance of Our town

First time leads prove themselves worthy

"I tried not to be big-headed, but it really was the most exciting thing that has ever happened to me," sophomore Becca Euliss said.

Becca played the lead female, Emily Webb, in the winter play of "Our Town." She played the main love interest to her next-door neighbor George Gibbs, played by senior Nick Coffing. She had to audition against three other girls for the part, two of which were her best friends.

"I was sick the day of the auditions, so I came to school just to audition. I was super nervous," Becca said.

Becca was not the only one to experience a first time lead. In the spring play of the "Importance of Being Earnest," junior Keagan Fife played the charcter of Algernon Moncreiff. Keagan's character was always the one in the middle of all the problems.

"In most things in my life, I am very outgoing and I'm never afraid to try something new, but theater always seems to scare me," Keagan said.

Although neither Becca nor Keagan found out from the list that they made the cut, they were both still excited about making the cast.

"I called one of my good friends to see who was cast. He really wanted the part of Algernon, so it was a little awkward when he told me I got the part and he wasn't even cast," Keagan said.

With extensive rehearsals, both Becca and Keagan felt strong about their character and that they deserved to be the lead. Even though they felt deserving, it didn't mean pre-show jitters weren't there.

"Initially, I thought that someone else would much better suit the part, but after a while I began to develop my character, and I felt very strongly that I deserved to be Algernon," Keagan said.

"Before the show I was very worried about getting the end of the third act right. The crying was something that I really didn't want to go wrong," Becca said. "It was an awesome opportunity to make the audience cry!"

Even though both Keagan and Becca debuted this year with their first lead roles, it didn't mean they were new to theater. However, Becca did have a little more experience in the theater department than Keagan, whose only other production was the "Boys Next Door"the summer of his sophomore year.

"I've been acting since I was 12. The stage is like home for me. If there is one place I'd want to spend endless hours on, it's a stage," Becca said. "Being under those lights, it's hard to describe the feeling I get. I guess you could say I feel infinite."

Winning through the decades

"I'm a Barbie girl in a Barbie world," sang Carly Weidman and her group loud and proud at the Winterfest's Lip Sync contest. Although they were last minute entries Carly and her group took center stage with smiles and looks of determination lip-syncing the words from the popular 1997 song "Barbie Girl" by Aqua.

The student council officers asked Carly and some of her friends to participate in the Lip Sync contest just days before the event.

"We said yes mostly as a joke," Carly said.

Along side Carly during the act were several of her close friends. During the show, the guys dressed up in girls' clothes to portray Barbie and the girls dressed as guys to play the role of Ken.

Due to the fact that Carly and her group had just been asked last minute to put together an act, they only spent less than a total of 10 hours practicing the weekend before Winterfest.

"The audience was actually getting into the performance," Carly said, " It's always fun to be able to act stupid with my friends and actually have people enjoy it and appreciate it."

The act wasn't such a joke when it was all over as Carly and her group placed second overall in the competition. Carly's group came in second place to the group "Guess Who," who performed to the song "1, 2 Step" by Sierra. Carly's group was presented with a huge fake check on stage after the show, and they also won a check worth $50 to split among the group.

"This year's Winterfest was really fun!" Carly said. "It was my first year participating in Lip Sync and I think I enjoyed this year more because I got more involved with all the activities and dress up days."

Spring Break

Drama Club takes over the Big Apple

"It gives kids an idea of what's out there," Mr. Jon Colby, theater arts teacher, said. "Students cannot truly grasp New York or Broadway by simply reading a book or watching a program about it. By visiting the city, students were able to experience several live Broadway performances, meet the cast members of 'Phantom of the Opera' and 'The Producers,' tour a theater and absorb the spectacle that is New York."

Drama club sponsors and members began planning and financing the trip early in the year; however, most of this dirty work was completed by Mr. Huddleston, Mr. Colby and the officers. They brainstormed fund-raising ideas and the results were both unique and successful. The club collected cell phones, sponsored a "Napoleon Dynamite" Night, and organized "Dub-C Divas Live," which featured some of Warren's most talented lady performers. They also hosted a Chocolate Fest where for a $7 admission guests were offered a variety of chocolate foods and given a chocolate cookbook,

After all the final preparations were made and Spring Break finally arrived, students left early Tuesday morning for their three day stay in the Big Apple. Upon their arrival, students immediately immersed themselves in the city's unique culture and famous history; they visited China Town and Little Italy and went sightseeing in Manhattan, Central Park and the Statue of Liberty. After exploring the city, the students and chaperones spent their nights on Broadway; they saw "The Producers" on Tuesday, "Wicked" on Wednesday, and on their final night in the city, they attended "Phantom of the Opera." In order to learn as much as possible from this experience, following the show students met with the cast and toured the theater.

"The best part of the trip was being able to see all the historical sights that are so often talked about and associated with New York; it really makes me want to go back and experience more. We also got on the 'Today Show.' And of course seeing 'Wicked' - that is one amazing show!" junior Melissa Olson said.

Students arrived back at Warren late Friday afternoon with both a greater knowledge of New York's history and a better understanding of how much hard work, time and dedication goes into producing an amazing and world-renown musical.

Helping Hands

Warriors helping the community

Usually during the holiday season Ms. Bravard is busy with the grueling task of organizing the Readers' Theater Christmas Production. Despite her obligations as a teacher and director of Readers' Theater she still finds time to devote her self to the community.

For several years Ms. Bravard has headed the canned food drive sponsored at Warren Central. "Many people don't know this but the canned food drive started 25 years ago in my mother's kitchen. We just started handing out food to any needy families that we knew of and over the years my students and Student Council have gotten involved."

Ms. Bravard is also involved in an organization called the Eastside Optimist that focuses not only on feeding needy families but also providing clothing and other necessities. "Through this organization, I participate in a program called 'Cloth a Child', in which we help parents in our community provide clothing for their children." Ms. Bravard said.

Also, during this holiday season Ms. Bravard and her husband are also volunteering their home and services to troops stationed in Kosovo, which is where Ms Bravard's daughter in law is stationed.

"My daughter in law is stationed in Kosovo and my husband and I have become den parents to her entire unit. So we are going to be mailing 24 boxes filled with food and goodies to Kosovo as well a Bosnia," Ms. Bravard said.

If clothing and feeding needy children and sending care packages to troops overseas weren't enough, Ms Bravard also devotes her time to reading stories to blind children and over years she has gotten her students involved in this project as well.

"It is really hard to do all of these projects with all my holiday shows and having to come to school and teach. I am so blessed in my life, but there are people out there who are not as blessed. My husband and I feel that we need to share and these projects touch so many lives," Ms. Bravard said.

'We Belong Together'

Finding the perfect dress remains a priceless tradition

The search began immediately after Christmas Break; it clouded your mind and consumed your every waking moment. There were, of course, no attempts to tame your efforts - every magazine, every sales ad and every flyer only encouraged you to widen your search for the perfect prom dress.

"There's no other option but to start shopping for a prom dress early," senior Darriel Jones said. "You have to impress all the guys and look better than all the other girls."

With this mentality, there was an unspoken understanding that the months leading up to prom would contain much less out-on-the-town entertainment and nights with friends would consist of hanging out at home.

"I really had to watch my money-spending habits before prom because I needed to buy accessories, a prom ticket, prom pictures, dinner and a King's Island ticket among other things," Darriel mentioned.

Prom day finally arrived; your dress was purchased nearly three months ago and Mom picked it up from the tailor early that morning. The hunt was finally over and as you stepped into your black limo decked out in the stunning prom dress and matching accessories that you had spent the last months searching for you could not help but feel relieved and proud that you'd attend a magical evening in the perfect prom dress.

As Goes the Class...

Seniors celebrate their last few weeks

As heat one began, 5 teams stormed the football stadium and the members lined up hand-in-hand down the 50 yard line prepared for a tough battle. Mrs. Widgren signaled to start and suddenly every noise and every distraction faded into the background; the only focus was on the team and winning.

The eight members quickly passed the hula hoop from one connected body to another, each member darting through the hoop like a snake attacking its prey. Finally the hoop reached the awaiting hand of the last member, the team let go of each others' hands and a designated teammate raced toward Senior Class Secretary Michael Deming to collect a placement plate.

"We never expected to dominate the competition; in fact, our only goal was to place higher than dead last," Katie Klacik, member of the Crazy Eights Physics team, said. "The whole point of the Olympics is to have a great time and to spend a little more time with your friends before we all leave for college; my team definitely accomplished that."

On May 12th, 20 teams, 160 senior boys and girls, gathered on the Astroturf at 6:30 pm to compete in the annual Senior Olympics competition. This year's team turnout far exceeded previous years'; as a result, the teams competed in only five events, each of which included four heats. The teams were first required to pass a hula hoop down their eight person lines while holding hands. After the Crach Rockets dominated this competition, girl members had to quickly drag the remaining teammates down the football field on a blanket. Next, students raced across the field carrying a small ball between their knees and chin; following this challenge, teams had to lie on the ground and roll atop one another to the finish line. Lastly, teams competed in the annual mattress relay and the festivities came to a close.

"Carrying the ball between our legs and under our chin was undoubtedly the hardest event," Katie said. "My team just couldn't get the hang of it until it was too late."

At the conclusion of event five, the 20 teams attended an informal awards ceremony. And although the first place team came as no surprise, all participants walked away winners because they undoubtedly carried on a Warrior tradition and created a life-long senior memory.

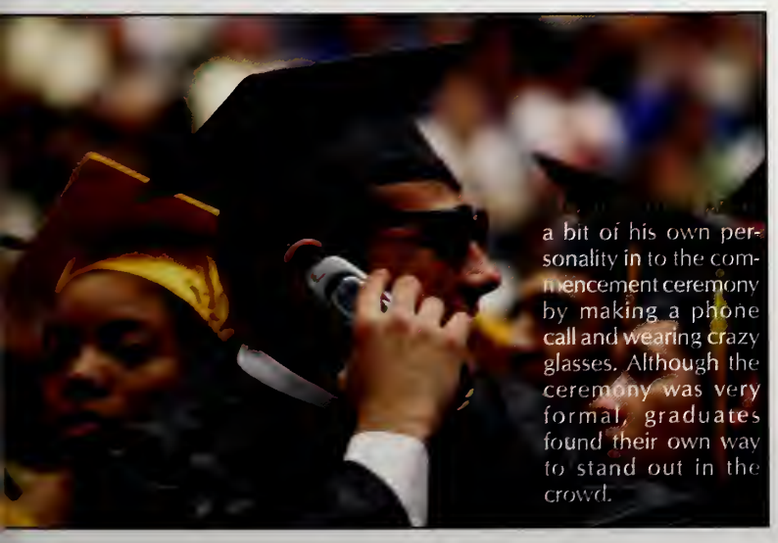
On Wednesday evening thousands of proud relatives and friends gathered at Conseco Fieldhouse to witness the 2005 Commencement ceremony. But before the 608 graduating seniors could walk across the stage or shift their tassels to the cap's right, they had to attend a morning rehearsal.

The students boarded eight Warren buses at 8:45 a.m. and were escorted to the Fieldhouse by several uniformed motorcycle police. Upon arrival they quickly swarmed through the ramp entrance to locate their assigned seats and awaited Mr. Burchett's graduation overview. After he introduced the distinguished faculty members and finished his opening address, Mr. Burchett clarified ceremony rules and invited student speakers on stage for a quick microphone check. As the rehearsal lingered on and many grew restless, the faint sound of "Pomp and Circumstance" began playing throughout the arena and students finally practiced the highly anticipated departing walk that truly signified their status as graduates.

And although it was obvious by the seemingly flawless ceremony that the rehearsal provided a means to work out the "Commencement kinks," it also provided seniors with one last chance to hang out with friends before the class of 2005 was finally forced to say goodbye to life at Warren Central.



a bit of his own personality in to the commencement ceremony by making a phone call and wearing crazy glasses. Although the ceremony was very formal, graduates found their own way to stand out in the crowd.

It's a normal Thursday morning and freshman Walter Offutt is walking through the hustle and bustle of the Freshman Academy in order to get to his first period class. With its own morning hangout and hallway congestion, the Freshman Academy creates an atmosphere of having a school within a school. Many other students like Walter are enjoying the slow transition into the high school environment, but is that slow transition preparing students well enough to meet Indiana academic standards?

"The academy is helping many students such as myself adapt to high school easier."
Walter Offut

Out of the 972 ninth graders who took the ISTEP test, 58 percent passed the English section and 59 percent passed the Math section. Also, out of the 905 tenth graders who took the GQE, 66 percent passed the English and 57 percent passed the Math section.

Though there was a slight drop in scores this year due to change in the grading curve and a greater emphasis on new material, teachers are using better preparations for next year. The math and English departments took taking step to ensure that next year's students are better prepared for this new test.

"Next year, the English department will turn their focus to improving students reading comprehension and vocabulary skills since those are the areas in which students did the worst in," English Department Chair Mr. Rick Reed said.

"The biggest key is convincing students who struggle with math to show their work on the problem solving part and to be willing to write something down instead of leaving it blank or unanswered," math Department Chair Mr. Kip Gorball said.

"I feel that the Freshman Academy is preparing very for next and the GQE," Walter said. "The academy is helping many students such as myself adapt to high school easier."

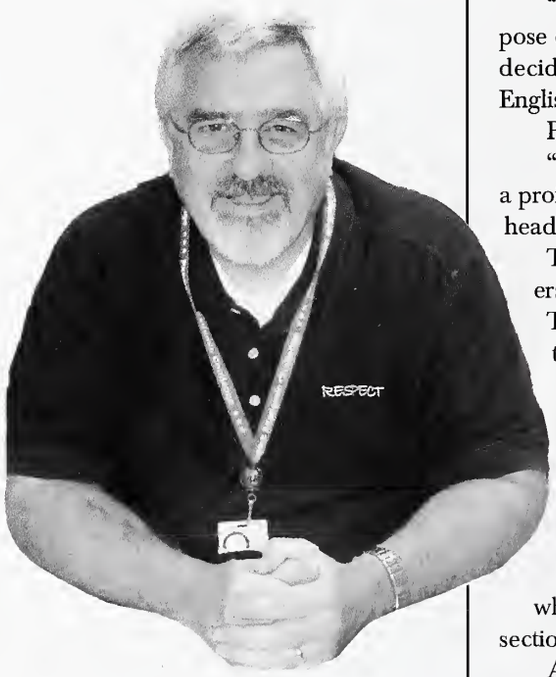
Challenge.

Mr. Reed: "Plagiarizing is not just cheating or breaking the rules, it's a crime."

English teachers use new technology to detect plagerism and find cheaters.



Jasmine Robinson, Simbarashz Mawoza, and Amanda Phair perform a play in Mrs. Brown's class. All Classical Literature classes were assigned one of four Greek plays to perform to the class.

Plagiarism is an age-old issue; where there's an easy source, there's possibly a cheater. According to teachers, there's no real type of student that plagiarizes, but it is an ongoing problem, recently made more common by students having easy access to the Internet.

The punishment for plagiarizing is department-wide in the English department.

A zero is given on the paper and depending on the weight of the assignment and the severity of the plagiarism, the student could possibly fail the class for the semester.

"[It can depend on] total stealing on purpose opposed to taking a few words on accident decides the failure," Ms. Alison Baldwin, an English teacher, said.

Plagiarism can be obvious to teachers.

"We can tell a student's style compared to a professional writer's style," Mr. Richard Reed, head of the English department, said.

There is also a new service available to teachers who suspect a student is cheating.

The website www.MyDropBox.com is used to scan the Internet for plagiarized papers and then tells the user if the paper has been stolen from a website.

The web site also services colleges and universities.

This website can also help students learn how to reference correctly. If they submit their paper to the site, the site tells them which sections require references and which sections might be plagiarized.

According to the web site, the average document return time is nine and a half hours, which can be beneficial to students and teachers.

"Students need to understand that most teachers, especially English teachers, know your work versus plagiarized work and [plagiarizing] is just a stupid thing to do," Ms. Baldwin said.

According to teachers, some students plagiarize because they don't want to do the work while others do it on accident because they are unable to paraphrase or cite correctly.

Several years ago, Mr. Reed taught a classical literature course. While he was grading an out-of-class essay on "The Odyssey", he noticed that the paper didn't follow the student's usual technique.

"The style didn't sound like this student's, or any student's, writing," he said.

According to Mr. Reed, this happened before the Internet was so easy to use, and he suspected the plagiarized source was Cliffs Notes.

"The essay was about 80 percent lifted directly from Cliff's Notes," Mr. Reed said.

The student received a 0 on the paper and Mr. Reed explained to the student what plagiarizing is. He also informed the student that if it happened again, failure of the course was possible.

Both Mr. Reed and Ms. Baldwin agree that when students plagiarize, it is disappointing.

"Plagiarizing is not just cheating or breaking rules, it's a crime.

At many colleges, students can be expelled for it. People have lost their jobs for it," said Mr. Reed.

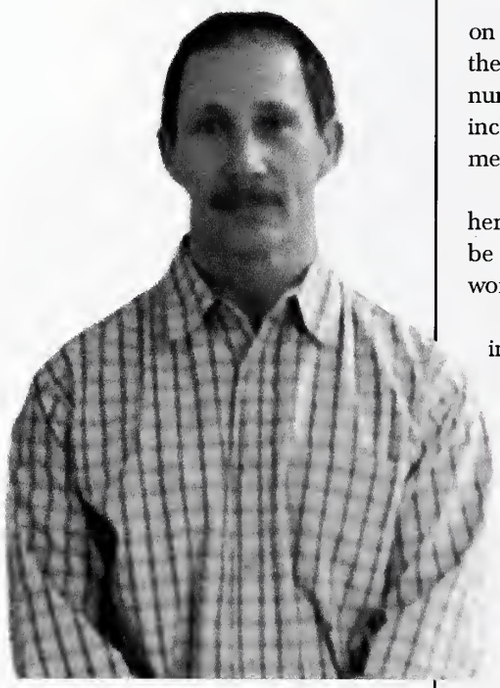
Projects done in math classes show students how math is important.



Mr. Rick Zimny is known throughout Warren Central for the big letters displaying his motto at the back of his classroom. "I like math. I need math." He hopes that some of his enthusiasm for algebra will rub off on his students.

"I try to show kids through different projects how math is needed in their daily lives and how it may affect career choices they make for themselves," Mr. Zimny said.

One of these projects involved researching a potential career choice to find out how math is used in that profession and then making a presentation in the form of a poster or slide show to illustrate the importance of math.

Freshman Brittany Adams did her project on nursing. Her research showed that among the other abundant ways math can be used in nursing, some of the other more important ways include measuring medicine, converting certain measurements, and determining flow rate.

Aside from knowing that math is useful in her future career, Brittany knows that it will also be important to her in her adult life outside the workplace.

"Math will be important in the future for me in doing bills and taxes," Brittany said.

Mr. Zimny knows that this time is important to instill a sense of appreciation for the usefulness of math.

"Algebra makes kids think in a logical manner and it helps them become better problem solvers, and better at critical thinking skills," Mr. Zimny said.

Freshman Michael Hause also completed the Algebra II project.

"I did my project on Software engineering," Michael said. He hopes to own his own business some day.

"In software engineering, it is important to know how to do percents and linear programming," he said.

Michael also understands that math will play a role in his everyday life as an adult.

Whittley Lewis, a sophomore, was in Mr.. Zimny's class last year and chose journalism as a possible career choice. She found that math is important even in a profession such as journalism, where it seems that it would not be very useful. For instance, little things in doing layouts of newspapers and magazines, such as setting up page margins and figuring out proportions of pictures requires math.

The project she did as a freshman helped her to acknowledge the fact that math is important, and she maintains that sense of understanding today.

"At first I didn't see the point of math but after I did it (the project) it was cool because it showed you real world applications for algebra. After you do that project, you find out that you need math in everything that you do," Whittley said.

Mr. Zimny's project is just a small part of all that his students will learn about math in their high school careers. While many students may not enjoy doing the project or get anything out of it, they can still appreciate their math classes.

"I appreciate what past teachers taught me, because its necessary for the math class that I am in and future math classes."

Brittany Adams doesn't think that her opinion of math will change much in the future.

"It's sometimes confusing, but I like it," she said.

"I like math. It's my favorite subject," Michael said.

"Mr. Zimny's motto is 'I like math. I need math,' and he made us all believe it by the end of the year because in everything you do you need math. Even if it's not second-year algebra, it's still some kind of math that you need," Whittley said.

JOHN LAWRENCE GETS help from Mr. Zimny on his pre-calculus homework. Triogmetric functions are part of what students learn in pre-calculus.

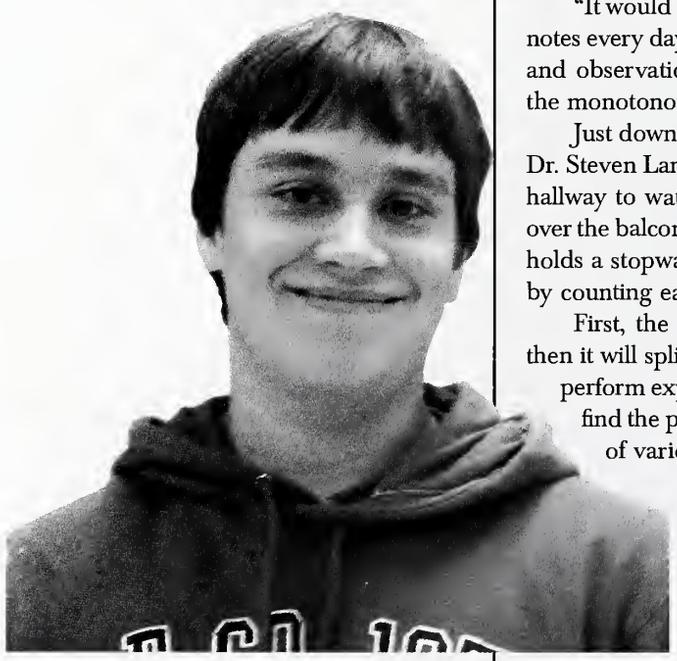
Hands-on approach to learning in science is important to students and teachers



Sophomores Jessica Murphy and Kyle Eberle put their final pieces in place then raise their hands.

Jessica and Kyle take apart the pieces and lean over the table again, attempting to correctly assemble an oversized, simplified strand of DNA in Mr. Gray's biology class.

For many students, this hands-on approach to learning is especially helpful in the subject of science.

"It would be pretty boring to sit there taking notes every day," Kyle said. For him, experiments and observations provide a necessary break in the monotonous lessons of biology class.

Just down the hall on a different day, one of Dr. Steven Landy's physics classes gathers in the hallway to watch Dr. Landy swing a pendulum over the balcony in the science wing. One student holds a stopwatch; the rest of the students assist by counting each time the pendulum swings.

First, the class watches the demonstration, then it will split into groups and each group will perform experiments and take data for itself to find the periods of oscillation for pendulums of various lengths.

"A lot of the time, it's so abstract. We can't tell what's going on unless we see it," senior Jacob Wise said. "It's good when something is real, not a hypothetical example."

Dr. Landy tries to fit in at least one experiment a week near the end of second semester.

"The material is a little harder, and I know kids are tired of school," Dr. Landy said.

Although many experiments are performed during class time, various demonstrations are set up around Dr. Landy's classroom for students who are interested or need extra help in understanding concepts, and optional home labs are offered for extra credit each week, named OHLOWs by Dr. Landy (Optional Home Labs of the Week).

"One time, I made a record player by using a needle connected to a funnel made out of paper for the OHLOW," senior Megan Huey said.

"If kids do the OHLOW, they will think about physics at home, or at least they can impress their parents," Dr. Landy said.

Mr. Frank Bynum had a different reason for doing experiments in his classroom: tradition. Every year, Mr. Bynum's chemistry students must execute a week-long research challenge called qualitative analysis, or "qual."

In "qual," each student is given one unidentified liquid to start with. The objective? To identify the liquid by executing a series of tests.

Each student is fitted out like a true scientist. Everyone must wear goggles and a lab coat, and each workstation has tongs, a Bunsen burner for flame testing, litmus papers to test if each substance is an acid or base and charts telling what characteristics each liquid holds.

"Qual" is the ultimate test of knowledge and execution for chemistry students.

"Of course I still remember 'qual'," Megan said. "It was so frustrating! When I finally guessed one of [my liquids] right, it felt good though."

Although teachers' reasons for doing experiments differ, one thing remains the same: experiments and demonstrations break up the monotony of lectures and note taking.

According to Megan, "Any day we have an experiment is good. It means I don't have to sit in my chair all period."

Mr. Barnes: "Whether you are a Democrat or a Republican...JUST VOTE!"

As senior Greg Curran pulls the lever to vote, he thinks that if you are "thankful for the veterans and our freedom" you need to vote.

After doing research for a government project, Greg made his decision. Because of views on social security, the war in Iraq and other foreign policies, he decided he would vote for President George W. Bush.

While Greg does not agree with everything President Bush says, he feels that Bush will do a better job in the White House than Sen. John Kerry would have.

In Warren Central's mock elections, a majority of senior guys voted for President Bush while a majority of senior girls voted for Sen. Kerry.

While celebrities were trying to get young adults to vote, P. Diddy with "Vote or Die!" and other musicians like John Mellencamp and Bruce Springsteen doing concerts, the expectation was that more young people were going to vote.

This, however, was not the case and they were not the deciding factor. According to Newsweek, 17 percent of all voters were young adults, 18 to 29 year olds. This was an increase from the 2000 elections of 9.3 percent.

Although nationwide, not as many young adults voted, in the Warrior nation, there was a large turnout. Whether teenagers volunteered at the polls or voted, Mr. John Barnes, social studies department head, thinks, "It was the largest participation in Warren Central history."

One reason why more Warren teenagers decided to get involved might have been because of the voting shirts that were sold at the bookstore.

The idea for the shirts was a group effort, but according to Mr. Barnes, Ms. Denise Carmean deserves most of the credit.

"It doesn't matter what your politics are, who you plan to vote for or whether you are a Democrat or a Republican... Just Vote!" Mr. Barnes said.

After many years of saying he would run for office, Mr. Barnes decided that this would be the year. Since there was no Democrat running for Warren Township Board District 7, that was what Mr. Barnes ran for.

Mr. Barnes thought he should run for office but always became busy placing students to work for the polls and helping match the students with candidates.

"As a teacher I have to set a good example-to be a role model," Mr. Barnes said.

Being a social studies teacher, Mr. Barnes believes that a way to set a good example should include "doing everything possible to teach students good citizenship."

He thinks that "there is nothing more important to our democracy that making sure that our citizens follow the issues, vote their conscience and, if they feel the need, run for office."

After the primary elections, no one had decided to run for the Democratic party in District 7, which is a heavily Republican district. When Mr. Barnes was asked to run by a party activist, he did not have any campaign funds and little time to organize.

Mr. Barnes did not win, but his average led the Democratic candidates. He found that it was "gratifying" that he had that many votes.

Even people who voted Republican decided to vote for Mr. Barnes instead of the Republicans choice. After teaching for 20 years in Warren Township, he believes that this is do to name recognition.

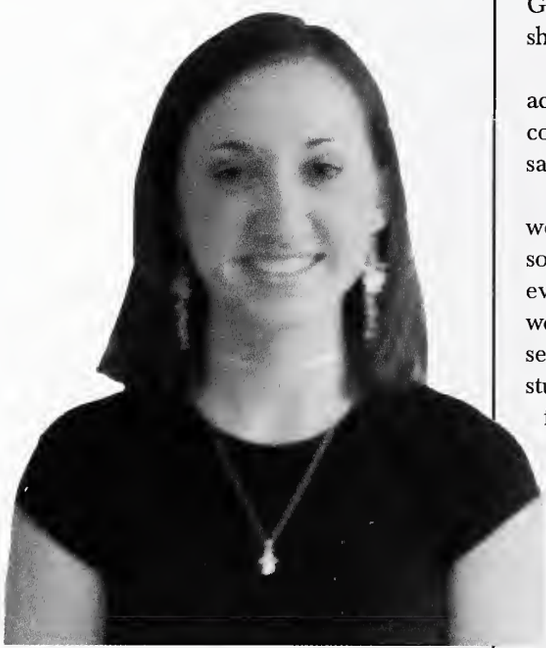
Emma Fisher: "It was a little bit scary, because no one in my family really spoke English."

Over the summer students immerse themselves in the language and culture by staying with German families.



During the summer of 2004, a group of 15 of Frau Angie Folco's German students were able to ultimately test their German-speaking and English-translation skills and explore the customs and etiquette of European culture.

During a three-week long excursion through Germany, Austria, Liechtenstein and Switzerland, the students were able to gauge exactly how much German they actually knew. Since all the students had taken at least three years of German before the trip, they all had a basic understanding of the language and could communicate basic thoughts and intentions.

Senior Sara Bemis found that speaking German on a daily basis was much harder than she thought it would be.

"Most people couldn't understand my accent, unless they knew English very well, and I couldn't think of words when I needed to," Sara said.

For the first ten days of the trip, the students were on a guided tour through Bavaria and southern Germany, visiting different cities almost every night. A young, rather eccentric French woman who was an expert on German history served as the tour guide for the Warren Central students and another English-speaking group from Missouri.

While the Missouri students served as an outlet for English-speaking, communication with the tour guide was a bit difficult simply because she spoke French, German, and English, sometimes combining them unknowingly.

On the guided tour, each city had its own very different feel. It was almost like each city was in a completely different country, which made the students realize how rich Germany's cultural heritage is. The first stop, Rothenburg ob der Tauber, was a tiny walled city in which automobiles were sparse. All of the streets were cobbled and the squat buildings with thatched roofs, window boxes and shutters came right out onto the streets. The quaint city of Rothenburg had few similarities to the next city the group traveled to: Munich.

"I thought Munich was the most interesting city. There was a lot of history I didn't know about," senior Conner Malander said.

Munich is a huge city—the only bigger city in Germany is its capital city, Berlin. Much of the sights the group saw in Munich were stored from bombings and attacks during WWII. Most of the recent history of the city regarding its Nazi past is saddening, however one of the city's local tour guides was able to tell the group more about Munich's past before Hitler.

After traveling to castles Neuschwanstein and Heidelberg, seeing differences between Austria, Switzerland and Germany, and exploring the expanses of the Black Forest, the group went on the second part of their journey: a homestay in Neustadt and der Weinstrasse.

Each student stayed with an exchange partner and his or her family for the rest of the time spent in Germany, sharing in house chores, going to school, having celebrations, and functioning as a member of the family.

"It was a little bit scary, because no one in my family really spoke English," junior Emma Fisher said.

During the homestay portion of the trip, Warren Central students rarely saw each other, therefore finding out what it was really like to be living and fully participating in another country's culture. Along with learning valuable communication skills, students were able to make a bond with their families, forming lifelong contacts in Europe.

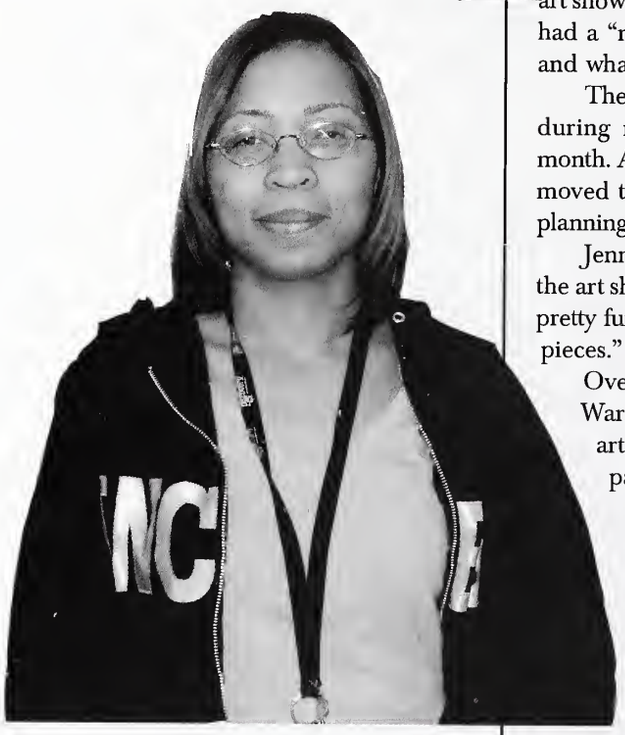
Mrs. Mason: "It's a lot of planning, things still go wrong."

Art show allows students to show off their talents to the Warren community.



This year, the Warren Central library held the second annual Spring Student Exhibition. It was held after school for the community to see for the week of April 11 until April 15.

The Warren Central art department decided last year that this would be a great way to show off the work students put so much time into.

Ms. Tonya Mason, art show coordinator and art teacher here at Warren Central, said that her and several students started working on this years art show when the first one ended last year. They had a "rap-up meeting" to see how things went and what they should change for the next year.

The students started planning the next show during meetings that were held every other month. As the event got closer, the meetings were moved to weekly. Ms. Mason said, "It's a lot of planning and things still don't go right."

Jennifer Rios, a senior who participated in the art show, said, "Working on the art show was pretty fun. A lot of us worked hard on all of our pieces."

Over 40 students from all grade levels at Warren Central participated in this years art show. Students displayed artwork from paintings to ceramics to photographs.

Most of the students who entered artwork said that they had an interest in art for much of their lives. Many began their art classes when they were elementary school.

They continued their love for art in middle school, and many of them were still in several art classes here at Warren.

There are many different art classes available for students with a love for art at Warren. The classes include ones like ceramics, three-dimensional art, jewelry, and drawing and painting.

The art show gives the students "the opportunity to represent ourselves and our love for art," said senior Samuel Camhi who had art displayed in the art show.

Samuel wants the art show to continue and become a "warrior tradition" like other events that have become a tradition here at Warren.

Even the students who found a specific way they liked to work, such as sketching with a pencil, were learning new techniques and becoming more comfortable with colors.

Art is a way for these students to express themselves in ways that sometimes are misunderstood. They want people to be able to experience what they are going through when they make their artwork.

The art show was a great way to show people art work that they do not get the chance to see. It also gives the students a chance to sell their art work to people in the community.

Jennifer said, "It is always great when you can see people admire your work and have them tell you how much they like it."

Samuel said, "Participating in the second annual Warren Central art show was a privilege and an honor."

The students said that without Ms. Mason, the art show would not have been done and it would have not been such a big success.

Jennifer went on to say, "Without her there would have been no organization and the show would not have worked so well for the past two years."

Ms. mason is quick to point to other teachers who deserve recognition for helping out with the art show like Mr. Tod Hawks, Dr. Sally Rice, and Ms. Anne Chivington.

Lia Moore: "I often felt as if all the attention was on me."

Separated weight classes are an advantage for many.

Men and women are often separated in the world of professional and high school sports.

Is it because fans think males play harder than females? Is it because of their difference in physique and athletic abilities?

The separated weight classes at Warren Central proved to be somewhat controversial, yet beneficial.

Ms. Nancy Plummer has been a physical education teacher at Warren Central for the past six years and she taught the all girls weight class.

"I think the coaches wanted a female coach to help the female athletes versus maybe a football coach," Ms. Plummer said.

The all-girls weight class has been at the school for the past four years. Volleyball players, girls tennis, girls golf and girls track are just a few sports whose athletes are represented in the class.

"Young female athletes need strength emphasized for them. Strength emphasis is a healthy life choice. "I like the separated weight classes because it emphasizes that they need to do this to get better in whatever they do." said Coach Gretchen Brooks, girls tennis coach.

The new class for girls was modified. The girls now had to run three laps before class and they no longer did plymetrics on Wednesdays.

The three core lifting exercises, power clean, squat, and bench press, helped everyone, but the new setup for girls was a huge step.

Many coaches requested that the focus be more on the abdomen and legs, especially for volleyball and cross-country; so the new system that Ms. Plummer created was to help both the individuals and the team.

The girls were also divided into groups according to her sport, which created a comfortable place to get better.

The boys class was convenient for Kevin Wright, the head football coach and athletic weights teacher.

"I can go over football things and work on strategies just for football," said Wright. "Most of the guys are pretty much on the same level."

Some of the football players also agree with the separated classes because they get more work done.

The girls' class is just the opposite of the boys' classes because their weight levels vary dramatically.

The basketball players generally lift more than tennis players and volleyball players and cheerleaders lift different amounts also.

"Males naturally feel more comfortable around males and the same thing for females, so I think the classes cause for a good working environment," said Plummer.

Ms. Plummer and many students said that it shouldn't matter the gender or how much someone can lift.

Everyone has one thing in common and that is the will to work hard and gain strength for his or her sport.

JULIO ROLON INTERVIEWS Indianapolis Colts coach Tony Dungy on his trip to Warren to give a speech on diabetes to various students. His trip was organized by Mr. Taylor.

Mrs. Condra: "These students face challenges that we can do easily."

The 12+ Program develops vocational opportunities for students with disabilities.

Standing and supporting people with disabilities is exactly what the 12+ Program is. The program was created for students with moderate and severe disabilities who are 18 to 22.

The students involved in this program will be graduating from Warren Central High School in the next few years.

The students will then come back to the school for two to three years.

"The goal is for all students with disabilities to graduate with their peers and then come back for 2 to 3 years," said Mrs. Dena Condra, special services teacher.

They work mostly on starting to access adult services and community recreation opportunities with community transportation.

This program helps develops life skills that will be needed after high school. The cafeteria is cleaned and swept by these students everyday.

Students cook something new in class everyday. This skill helps students learn to use a knife and the oven.

The students also go out and do something outside of school twice a week. Activities include ice skating and going to the mall.

This program also helps some students get jobs and volunteer positions.

The places that help support these students with jobs are Papa John's, Morningstar Golf Course, and Old Bethel Food Pantry.

Employment consultants is a big reason for the success in this program.

Employment consultants provide training and support for both the training and support for the employee and the employer.

Not only do the students benefit from working, the employers do too.

Some ways they benefit are they can train them to do whatever they need and the services are free.

The employer gets assistance in finding a qualified, reliable applicant to fit the needs that they themselves have set.

"I hope in the future to help place some students in more paid positions and to build more relationships with outside sources that help our students and their parents," said Mrs. Dena Condra.

Warren is only the second school to develop a program of this kind.

The 12+ Program is only in its first year here at Warren Central High School.

The 12+ Program is also a great opportunity for our students in Warren Township to have a solid basis for life after high school.

The 12+ Program also prepares parents for what skills and activities that their child can be involved with in the community.

'These students face challenges everyday that we can do easily. When they face that challenge head-on and accomplish a small portion of that you would think they have won the lottery," said Mrs. Condra.

Ms. Grams: "The purpose of this course is to ensure that freshmen get off on the right track."

Orientation to Life and Careers helps students figure out what they want to do when they get older.

Alexandra Kieta sits in Orientation to Life and Careers taking a survey to see what skills she possesses. Finding out about her skills now can direct Alexandra to classes she needs to succeed later in life.

"This class has helped me really identify who I am, what I want in life and what my skills are," Alexandra said.

Another freshman, Lauren Chapman, does worksheets that teach her to balance budgets, a real life skill she expects to use.

"This class has helped me get prepared in ways that will help me succeed in the real world," she explained.

Orientation to Life and Careers and Computer Keyboarding were two required classes for all freshmen. Both became required in the 2003-2004 school year, but were offered as electives in the Walker Career Center before that. Orientation to Life and Careers was taught in the Freshman Academy, while Computer Keyboarding was taught in the Walker Career Center near the other computer classes.

"Orientation to Life and Careers is especially important to freshmen who might not see why their choices now will affect them later. This class is great at getting you focused on life," Alexandra said.

"I really liked the fact that Ms. Grams always wanted to see each child succeed, whether it was throwing a party for all the students that had A's or giving out prizes for doing well on a test," Lauren said.

According to Ms. Cathy Grams, one of the three Orientation to Life and Careers teachers, the class offered the chance for students to become more structured and start of their high school careers right. Also, students learn how to get a work permit, fill out job applications, time management skills and conflict resolution.

"The purpose of this course is to insure tha freshmen get off on the right track and develop successful work and study habits," Ms. Grams said.

Other important things focused on in this class include job interview skills, with mock interviews for practice, guest speakers from the National Guard promoting the Military Career Cluster, and taking an interest inventory, which helps students learn their strengths and weaknesses. Knowing this can help students decide what career to pursue based on what they are good at.

Employees from the Peace Learning Center also visited to teach students in the Orientation class how to prevent violence.

One more focus of the class was the on the book "The Seven Habits of Highly Effective Teens," by Sean Covey. These seven skills, including "Be Proactive" and "Begin With the End in Mind," were used to help students get organized and be better people overall.

"This class helps most with career exploration. There's no way to document if it helps GQE or ISTEP test scores, because it helps mainly with career choice," said Ms. Grams.

Another required class, Computer Keyboarding, taught students basic computer skills such as typing quickly and accurately and navigating programs such as Word, Powerpoint, and Excel.

"This class breaks bad habits and teaches proper typing technique, which can help students avoid injuries later in life," Ms. Anna Stumpf, a first-year computer teacher, said.

"Students also gain confidence in learning a new technique and managing files on the network. It's also a challenge for them; they think they know everything and then discover they are learning," Ms. Stumpf said.

ASHLEY ROWELL AND Courtney Sholar earned an A in the Freshman Orientation to Life and Careers class and were invited to a celebration sponsored by the National Guard. The National Guard provided pizza, certificates, and dog tags. The dog tags read "Success is a Journey, Not a Destination, Class of 2008."

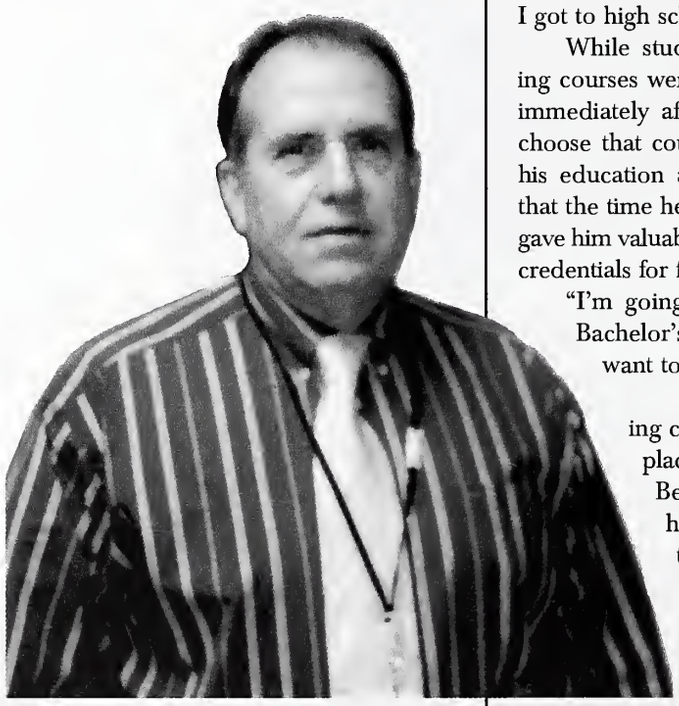
Technical classes taken in high school help students learn more about possible future careers.



Senior Matt Dailey was one of the students that benefited greatly from one of the 18 technical training courses offered in the Walker Career Center.

He knew for a long time that he wanted to be a chef, and now he is involved in the culinary classes in the Threshold, the restaurant located in the Walker Career Center. Matt was involved in the food classes for several years at Warren Central.

"I started taking food classes as an elective. I had to wait for my junior year to get involved [in the Threshold], but after I did, it was pretty cool. I knew I wanted to be a chef since before I got to high school," Matt said.

While students who took technical training courses were virtually qualified to find jobs immediately after graduation, not all students choose that course. Matt planned to continue his education after high school, but he knew that the time he spent working at the Threshold gave him valuable work experience and excellent credentials for future jobs.

"I'm going to a culinary school to get a Bachelor's degree in culinary arts. Then I want to open a restaurant," Matt said.

Matt also competed in cooking contests on the cooking team that placed first at the State competition. Because of his success in contests, he planned to continue competing throughout college and even after owning a restaurant.

The impact that technical training courses had on students can be life changing and extremely beneficial, however, not all schools can offer these types of programs.

Known as technical training, those classes are divided into three general categories: business, family and consumer science, and industrial technology.

Students who chose to study a subject in one of those areas could have chosen from a wide variety of classes, such as health careers, dental careers, building trades, small engine repair and computer assisted drafting.

According to Walker Career Center Counselor Mr. Terry Woodburn, technical training courses were beneficial to a broad range of students.

Classes involved manual work, such as small engine repair or welding and were valuable to students who enjoyed working with their hands. Classes involving health-related careers were beneficial to students who plan on attending college after high school. Many of the business classes were helpful for students who plan to major in that area in college.

"These types of programs are a unique opportunity because very few schools can offer a career center attached to their high school. They lead to training in technical schools and colleges," Mr. Woodburn said.

Warren Central students had the opportunities to be able to take part in technical training classes as high school students.

Matt was glad that he took advantage of the opportunity and has benefited greatly from it. It gave him a head start in his restaurant career.

"I've learned all the aspects of the restaurant industry, and I know more than anyone my age that wants to get into the industry," Matt said.

Monday afternoon. Twenty-one girls head to a reading club meeting for an hour of fun with their friends. The reading club is made up of special needs girls to develop reading and social skills. The club started just four years ago with only six girls. Within the short amount of time the club has been established; it has grown tremendously to 21 girls.

"They look forward to Mondays after school because there is such a variety of books and activities to do," Ms. Rita Jamieson stated.

After reading the American Girl series, the club took an overnight trip to Chicago to visit the American Girl Museum. At Christmas, the members of the club went out to dinner and a movie, which helped use social skills that were worked on during meetings.

" We talk about dating, personal hygiene or anything that's important to the girls."
Ms. Jamieson

"This Club has really helped our students to be more social," Ms. Jamieson said.

Before reading or doing any other activity, the girls have a snack and socialize with each other and their teachers.

"We talk about dating, personal hygiene or anything that's important to the girls," Ms. Jamieson continued.

The girls have earned paper money throughout the year by doing good deeds. Teachers have donated items from Bath and Body Works and other items, which the girls were able to bid on at the end of the year.

"[The club is all girls because] the girls would be more interested in the boys than the books," Ms. Jamieson stated.

The club has helped girls develop better reading skills, which is an important skill for everyone to learn. It has also established a fun way to help the girls get excited about developing essential skills.

Success in Drive

Canned food drive helped feed families in Warren Community

Ms. Pam Bailey's first period class went knocking door to door asking for donations of cans for the annual canned food drive. A group of three collected over 200 cans in one trip. Ms. Bailey's class donated all of their cans to the Old Bethel food pantry to help stock their shelves during the bussiest time of the year. With over 220 people touched by the drive, Warren set a new record.

During the annual canned food drive held before the Thanksgiving holiday, 25,001 cans were collected.

Students and faculty members brought in cans for about two weeks trying to reach a goal of 25,000 cans set by Principal Burchett. He challenged the school if the goal set was reached, he would dress up like Elvis and sing one of Elvis's old songs. Not only was the whole school working against Mr. Burchett, but there were also first period classes rivaling against each other. Ms. Julie Oblon's first period class brought in the most items.

When the total was in and the goal had been reached, Mr. Burchett kept his word and dressed up like Elvis and sang "All Shook Up." The whole school watched and listened intently as the video played over morning announcements.

At the end of two weeks of collecting cans, the goal fell a little short.

"We were able to reach our goal due to recent contribution from Ms. Christie," explained Student Council Vice President Zack Sanders. After finding out how close to the goal everyone was, Ms. Teresa Christie donated the remaining amount of cans.

Student Council members stayed after school to put cans in bags and load them up into SUVs and vans from volunteers. The cans were then delivered directly to families homes by the volunteers to over 40 families who received about 15 bags or about 300 cans each to help them get through the

One-on-One

Student tutors help fellow students while also earning NHS points

At one of the National Honor Society tutoring sessions in the cafeteria after school, eight students are there—three to be tutored and five tutors. This gives the opportunity for the three students to have more than one-on-one attention.

Many of the NHS tutoring sessions have the same sort of scenario. Few students were taking advantage of the opportunities available to them. Some parents make their children attend tutoring, some teachers require it if grades for that class get too low.

"It's such a good program," said Ms. Clarkson, one of the tutoring sponsors. NHS tutoring takes place after school in her room every Tuesday and Thursday. "I really don't understand why more kids aren't here to get the help they need."

National Honor Society has been sponsoring after school tutoring since it was first started at Warren. Four hours of tutoring is a requirement to stay in NHS. But plenty of NHS members exceed that requirement and volunteer their time much more than that.

Another option for tutoring offered from NHS was the more recently implemented study tables specifically for athletes. For any students in athletics that have an F on their report card or a grade point average lower than a 5.0, study tables are required by the team coach. This tutoring service was created by Ms. Elizabeth Wright, the social worker for the Freshman Academy.

However, tutoring has only one of the few community service projects that NHS has undertaken. Ten hours of community service work is mandatory per year, as well as five hours of work for the school. National Honor Society is a select program in which members have to be willing to donate their time to helping those around them.

Brad Ellington goes for class president title repeat

"I was really confident about giving my speech. I actually chose not to practice, but instead go in there with a bunch of ideas and try to express them to the best of my ability," Brad said.

Brad posted a few posters around the halls and said a few words in each of his classes, but the most important way he got his word out was through his friends and classmates who believed Brad would continue to do an awesome job leading their class next year.

"I ran for class president because, well, I wanted to lead my class. I wanted the position where I could do something good for the school and be able to have others help me," Brad stated.

Many students believe class president is just a title without any responsibility behind it, but Brad helps organize class events, such as decorating banners for homecoming and winterfest. He also encourages his classmates to participate in penny wars and other class competitions throughout the year.

"I get to lead or help lead class council meetings. I try to get people involved as much as possible. I help brainstorm and advertise ideas, and I help be a leader in whatever projects we do as a council," Brad said.

A week after Brad gave his speech to faculty members in the office, students voted in their English classes for their next year's officers.

After speeches, votes, and countless hours of waiting, the morning announcements read off the names of the newly elected officers as they flashed on the screen. Brad was named once more the class president of 2007.

"I was nervous about running. The other two candidates could have just as easily won and that made me nervous on election day," Brad said.

THE ALL-GIRLS CHOIR, Hi-Lites, perform at the parent preview. The girls stayed after school each Monday during competition season to get more practice.

UNDER BRIGHT LIGHTS

Hard work pays off and the choirs hear "No Bad News"

The lights are bright, and the crowd is loud, but all you can hear is the fast beating of your heart. You anxiously await the announcers to call your name. Then, the music starts, the show begins, and somehow your anxiety was left backstage.

The show choir experience is a fascinating one. The competitions are tough and long, yet exciting and worthwhile as well. Warren's two show choirs, Hi-Lites and Connection, traveled to many different high schools to show how the hard work paid off. Team spirit, dedication and hours of practice were all needed ingredients to perform well.

"I couldn't imagine spending so much time on anything more exciting," sayid Connection member Jessica Murphy. "I love singing and dancing."

"I love to sing and perform. I've made so many friends and sisters by being in Hi-Lites, but I've also learned how to sing, dance, and breathe correctly. We're not always about drama despite what the average person may think. We're actually a very talented group of girls," said Senior Ashley Holt, who has been in Hi-Lites for two years.

Although singing and dancing are definitely an important part, there's so much more included in show choir. During competition season, which started around February and usually ends in late March or early April, the choirs become more like family than classmates. So much energy and time is put in to make the competition show all that it can be. But in the end, there's no greater feeling than the accomplishment of a successful performance. Being in show choir was not only fun and beneficial, but the experience was like no other.

"Nothing boosts your self esteem more than being on stage and having people applaud for you," said Connection member Becca Euliss.

Neither group wanted to hear "No Bad News" (one of Connection's songs), so the hard work and talent was never-ending.

PLAY-A-THON

12 hour music marathon raises thousands of dollars for the orchestras

Before class parties, field trips or fundraisers could happen, a lot of planning by the orchestra council had to happen. The orchestra may seem like a group that may not need a council of its own and may also seem insignificant, but this group of about 20 students did many things, including the Play-a-thon, which required more work than all of the other projects combined.

The tradition of the Play-a-thon started during the 2002-2003 school year and raised $1,500 in the first year. Planning for the Play-a-thon took many hours, long meetings and dedicated workers. Since the event lasted from 9:00 in the morning to 9:00 at night, many different aspects went into the event, but mainly participants were needed.

"In years past I held two day auditions, but this year I held one-day auditions from 3-5:30 in the PAC for any vocalist or instrumentalist," junior member Jessica Allen said.

Several soloists on instruments such as violins and horns showed up, as well as a few garage bands.

"We scheduled the 'softer' music, like soloists and small ensembles, in the morning and then had the 'louder' musicians, like the bands, play toward the evening," Jessica said.

However, no matter who was playing, the orchestras made it a tradition to start off the day and end the day by playing their contest music. This year, as opposed to previous years, the orchestra decided to hold true to their goal of having music playing non-stop for the whole 12 hours.

"I made a couple 'mixes' of music ranging from Broadway music to music from the radio to play while acts were setting up or tearing down, to make sure not a minute went by without music playing," Jessica said. The orchestra raised $1,800 at the end of the night.

"I feel like the day went off very well, there were very few glitches and it brought the orchestra closer together during the 12 hours of hard work, while making a lot of money," Jessica said.

Contest Preparation

Honors Band makes 9th consecutive appearance at State

"Band directors get tense in April, you know," Mr. John Hilmer, director of the Honors Band and music department chair, remarked in class two weeks before the annual Indiana State School Music Association (ISSMA) State Qualifications contest.

The Honors Band is compiled of the most talented instrumentalists at Warren, most of whom are seniors. As of 2004, the band program was refurbished–the Honors Band class met year-round, contradicting its one-semester life span in previous school years, as a preparation for ISSMA content. The contest was scheduled on April 30, 2005.

In preparing for contest, Monday through Thursday, from January to April, stood sectional time for each of the instrumental groups. Another step to prepare was taken by Mr. Hilmer inviting various clinicians, musicians and professors to guest conduct for the night and aid in the band's rehearsals. Every Tuesday night practice started off the same.

"Let's give a warm Warren welcome to our guest tonight!" Mr. Hilmer said.

On March 23, the Honors Band traveled to Lawrence Central High School to be part of the Lawrence Central Spirit of Central Music Festival. This opportunity presented itself as a mock contest, complete with judges and score sheets. Afterward, the band received help from a different band director as part of a clinic.

The Honors Band's challenging repertoire helped them to advance past regional qualifications and on to state. It was the ninth time the Honors Band had gone to compete at ISSMA state. After a wonderful performance, a handful of band members gathered at the awards ceremony on May 7, only to be slightly disappointed by a 16th place finish.

"We got 16th," Mr. Hilmer lamented, "but at least we had the opportunity to compete at state."

It's About the Brain

Band Wins Superior Division Rating At Bands of America

Senior Ryan Curtiss took his position on the field as he looked up at the people filling the chairs throughout the stadium. The seats were packed and there were proud parents of the band cheering them on. Ryan had spent hours each week since July preparing for the biggest competition.

Bands from across the nation gathered downtown at the RCA Dome for the Bands of America contest in October. Fans piled into the stadium to cheer on their favorite band as they put on their last performance of the year.

"Every practice is taken as if I were mentally prepared for the actual competition," Ryan stated.

Bands of America is a different competition than those at local high schools. Bands of America holds some of the most prestigious competitions every year. At local competitions, there are just a few bands from near by, but at Bands of America, there are bands from almost every state.

As the band began to play their instruments and march around the field, the judges quickly began to make critiques and write down the scores on the band's performance.

"All of the hours of practice and critique went into my final show and it was bitter sweet," Ryan said.

After all the bands were done performing, the Gold Brigade was ready to see if their performance had earned them an award. They waited anxiously to hear their name called for their award. When it was all over, the Gold Brigade earned a superior division rating award for their final performance of the year.

"The rush I felt when accepting a superior division rating award in front of a packed house at the RCA Dome, well, words can't say enough."

New group gives girls chance to perform as part of a team

The Serendipity Guard stays after school to practice spinning a flag just like the Winterguard, but the Serendipity Guard is made up of girls with moderate and severe disabilities.

These disabilities include cerebral palsy, autism, and vision impairments. A majority of the girls come from different LIFE programs at the high school, Stonybrook, and Raymond Park. LIFE stands for Living Independently through Functional Education. Through this program girls learn the life skills they need to go out in the world and live as successfully and independently as possible.

Many of the girls in Serendipity have not had the opportunity to be on a team because of their disabilities. This is the only the second special education guard in the nation. They are proud to say that they are in Serendipity, because it is something special and fun just for them. It increases their self-esteem and helps them achieve their goals not only in the guard setting but also outside of guard.

"The girls in Serendipity look at other groups in the school and want so badly to be a part of them. I am just giving them the opportunity to do that and achieve goals they have for themselves," said Coach Guldner, a grad who instructs the girls.

The girls practice every Wednesday after school until 5:00 p.m. The practice consists of spinning a flag and dancing to a few songs. According to Hayley the girls especially love the "Hokey-Pokey" and the "Y.M.C.A." "Having the girls come to practices each week enables us to do more with the them and offer more support," Hayley said.

The girls performed at a parent preview in the fall for colorguard season. In the winter the girls performed at Mooresville in "exhibition" class for the winterguard season.

" The main goal of this program is to make the girls feel good about themselves," Coach Guldner said.

"I am just giving them the chance to acheive goals they have for themselves."

Students bring smiles to children's faces when they travel to elementary schools

Aaron Cool, with a mass of around 530 other elementary students, gathers in an auditorium packed tight with excitement for the Reader's Theatre show getting ready to unfold. Roughly 70 students in grades 10 to 12 shuffle in with shining faces helping to carry in their equipment and props. Aaron turns to his friend, Hannah, and whispers about the guy standing near the front with antlers on his head.

Every year Reader's Theatre, taught by Susan Bravard, goes around and visits all of the elementary schools in Warren Township, putting on skits for them and basically just doing anything they possibly can, even if it means making an idiot of themselves, to put smiles on the children's faces.

"The kids love our performances. They love the funny things we do, and love getting to watch us perform. They even memorize some parts," rookie member Cymone Williams said.

The Reader's Theatre members put a lot of pride and effort into their shows, practicing diligently every day in order to help make their shows the best that they can be.

"In a typical class period we come in, take attendance, and then go straight to rehearsing our skits or dances," senior member Nicole Bigham said.

Since the members practice so frequently and are generally around each other a lot, they get to establish strong friendships with the other members that they might not otherwise have had the opportunity to make.

"I enjoy it so much. It's just a small way to touch the children's lives," said Nicole. Even though it seems that Reader's Theatre is enjoyed most by those actually in it, the children also enjoy the shows immensely.

"I like when the high-school [students] come. They make me and my friends laugh a lot. I want to be in Reader's Theatre when I go to high school," said Aaron.

"Reader's Theater is the best part of my day, especially when I'm having a bad day."

RIKISHI

Japanese Club members learn traditions through sumo tournament

Two opposing wrestlers at opposite sides of the ring are dressed in white robes and stretching in preparation for the start of their match. They stomp their feet and throw salt mimicking the traditional religious symbolic movements that start the Japanese sumo-wrestling matches.

This match was at the Japanese Club Wrestling Tournament that was held in February. The Japan club organized this event to help the members get a better understanding of the Japanese culture. Each rikishi, or wrestler, cleanses his mind and body by rinsing his mouth with water, which is the source of purity, and then wipes his body with a paper towel.

Instead of wearing the silken loincloth, or mawashi, that the Japanese traditionally wear in matches, the Japanese Club wore robes, and brought their own personality onto the mat by wearing headbands, even though they are not a part of the normal sumo uniform, they provide a way to be original.

Although Japan is commonly known for this sport, it actually originated in China. The Japanese took it over centuries ago and made it their own, and they used it as a form of ritual dedicated to the gods with prayers for a good harvest.

The club also practices other Japanese holidays and traditions throughout the year and studies the culture as well.

"The club studies cultural things, celebrates the Japanese holidays, and traditions." He also said that in regular meetings, the club watches Japanese animation called "anime," junior Chris Hilgenberg said. They also use meetings to plan events such as the sumo-wrestling tournament.

"Honor and the value of self, family, and friends is my favorite thing about the Japanese culture," junior Andy Alam explained.

SKILLS USA

Students compete in Skills USA contest and come out on top

Allen Witsman, junior, was a State Champion and National Finalist in the 2005 Skills USA State Competition. This event was held at the Walker Career Center on April 15 and 16. The WCC hosted other career centers from all around the state.

The Walker Career Center was teamed up with a non-profit organizattion, Skills USA. This organization provides education experience for students in the form of leadership, teamwork, citizenship and character development. They want to teach students the skills they need to excel in anything from janitorial work to robotics.

There are three parts to the test in which Allen and his fellow competitors have to complete. They took a written test for knowledge, building a working electronic kit and troubleshooting a simulated circuit.

"The most important part of the competition was to know how to use the tools that they gave you safely," said Allen.

A first place title was not the only thing that Allen won at the competition; he was also awarded a $2000 scholarship. This scholarship is for Allen to use for classes at Purdue University after he graduates from high school.

Junior Nick Miller also shined at the Skills USA competition. He was elected as the one of the seven SkillsUSA state officers to serve during the 2005-2006 school year. As an officer he serves as an ambassador for Indiana in the National Skills USA Conference, goes to area schools to talk about the program and helped run the 2006 Skills USA State Competition. Along with this great achievement Nick came in fourth place in electronics at state competition.

Other students did well in the Walker Career Center. Senior Zecheriah Kottlowski is one of only about 30 people accepted into the Architect program at Ball State University. He also placed fourth at the Skills USA competition in Architectural CAD. Robert Hostetler, Zachary Piercy, Kevin Baumeister and James Minchin were also winners at the Skills USA State Competition.

The Grim Reaper

Students take a stand on drinking and driving

As the bell rings for class to begin, the students greet each other and talk about everything that happened throughout the day. Sophomore Allison Van Velse sits quietly, watching the other students cheerfully chat. Allison is neither shy nor a loner, but still, she refuses to speak.

On Thursday, April 28, the Just Say No members participated in "Grim Reaper Day," and had to be "dead" for the entire school day. Just Say No is a club against the use of drugs and alcohol, and the purpose of this day was to show how everyone is affected by drinking and driving. The "dead" students represented the lives lost in car accidents by drunk drivers.

The purpose of the Just Say No club is to warn students about the effects of drugs and alcohol and offer safe and fun alternatives to drug and alcohol use.

"There are other options to having fun than drugs and alcohol," said Mr. John Greenlee, a Just Say No sponsor. "If you're going out to go bowling, there's no reason to get drunk first."

The Just Say No club has participated and sponsored many activities and events like the Red Ribbon Week (a week devoted to bring notice to the use of drugs), Orange Ribbon Week (a week devoted to bring notice to the use of alcohol), the Great American Smoke Out, and the Prom Pledge. The members continue to become more involved by advertising the club with posters, participating more in drug and alcohol campaigns and continuing to support their decision to be "drug free."

The members are role models who demonstrate their integrity and commitment daily by holding firm to their beliefs. Standing up against peers and being an individual is one of the hardest aspects of teenage life. Saying "yes" has always been easy, but the members step up to meet the challenge to "Just Say No."

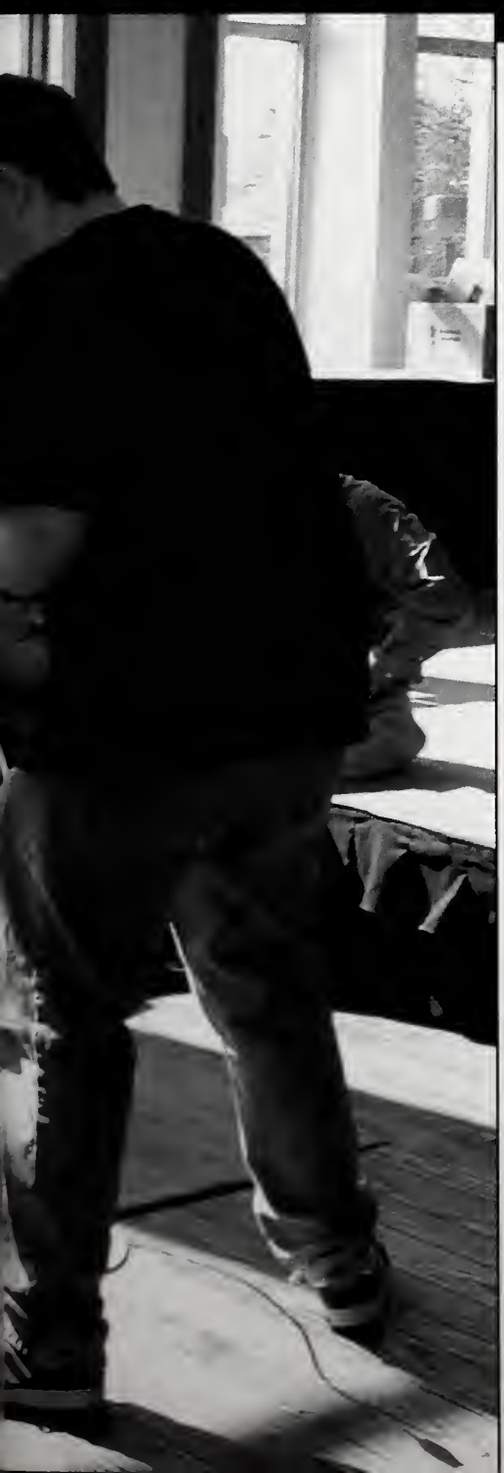
Big Words

Spellbowl team earns 5th in tournament



STEPHEN EMMONS AND Lee Burns compete in the "Robot Ramble." They had to make a robot pick up certain objects and place them in a box.

Warren Central's Spellbowl team is probably one of the only groups that can really make something like spelling fun.

The team works from the beginning of the school year every Tuesday and Thursday morning for one competition. The Spellbowl competition was held on October 18 at Arlington High School. Twenty schools participated in the annual Spell-Off, and Warren's team came in 5th overall.

There are 10 rounds at the competition, and each team member spells ten challenging words individually–one person spells per round. However, the point system is based on the cumulative total score, so the achievement of each person is important to the success of the team. Each team member works harder so they don't let down the rest of the team.

The team was lead by Advisor Steve Comiskey and the "captain-trio" of juniors Amanda Wood, Jennifer Risser and Becky Klimaszewski. The leaders of the previous year's team hand pick the Spellbowl team each year, and it is usually fairly small. This year's team was made up of only 11 people.

"There are always openings for anyone who actually likes to spell," Captain Amanda said.

Five important seniors graduated in 2005, but the team for the 2006 school year is still hopefull with the all the captains returning as seniors. Mr. Comiskey tried hard to keep his team motivated, and he refered to each of them as "studs" every time they spell words correctly during practices.

"We really have a lot of fun," said Amanda. "We do more than just sit in a room and spell out of a dictionary. The team becomes close friends, and Mr. Comiskey does a great job at keeping us working and focused without having to make it a serious environment, which is good with the goofy-fun-loving group we always have."

ANOTHER VICTERY

A trip to nationals after another successful trip to state contest

While most students were standing by their classroom doors getting ready to run into the hallways and out to their cars for a relaxing weekend, senior James Victery, known simply as "JV," sat contemplating which practice to go to and how he was going to be everywhere at once. He had play practice, in which he had one of the lead roles, Fun Monkey practice and speech practice, where they are depending on him as the co-captain to be there.

After several hours of practicing after school for each event, he then had to rush home and finish all his other priorities and get some sleep so he can be up bright and early at five in the morning for another speech meet.

Being in all these activities may make it hard for the average person to manage, but JV manages to get everything done and excel at it while he's doing so. He's been involved in speech for four years, drama for five years and Fun Monkey for two years.

During the five years he participated in drama, he participated in ten shows at Warren and five outside of Warren.

"I have three favorites: "Boys Next Door," "Rumors," and "Seussical the Musical," JV said.

Although Drama has been a main part of JV's high school career, speech has been a more time consuming project all on its own. The 2004-2005 Speech team ended the season with a phenomenal record and came in second place overall at the state competition.

"I won't lie I was disappointed, I thought we could win," JV said. "We got fifth place my freshman year and second my senior year, so I'm happy with that.

Even though the team didn't do as well as JV had expected or hoped for, he excelled above the others. Out of all the teams in the district and all the members on the team JV was one of only two people chosen to go to nationals for speech.

RADIO ACTIVE

Senior travels to broadcast games live on WEDM

The bell rings to signify the end of the school day for Warren Central High School. While the majority of students file out the exits and head home, it is just the beginning of the second half of the day for senior radio broadcasting student Justin Bratton.

Justin gathers his belongings and heads straight to the WEDM studio to drop his stuff off. When Justin gets back to the studio, he gets down to business by printing off statistics, rankings, and all items of importance that he and his color analyst can mention on the air about Warren and their opponent.

After reading off and memorizing the opposing team's cast of characters, Justin gathers the necessary equipment that will be needed to broadcast his and his partner's voices over the airwaves. Justin finally meets up with fellow announcer, and senior, Johnathon Wendt to review stats.

After arriving at the arena, Justin and John are assembling the equipment, reviewing their game plan one more time before going live, and checking in with game board operator, senior Michael Falls.

Finally, it's 3, 2, 1...when Justin exclaims "Good evening and welcome to Lawrence Central where the Warriors are set to take on the Arlington Golden Knights."

The exciting game goes smoothly for the most part, until the fourth quarter when technical difficulties hit the radio crew in the waning minutes of a possible upset by Warren. The team on the hard court fell 63-55. Although the basketball team put on a heck of a performance, they still felt they could have done better. A similar story was written for the radio team as well; good performance, but plenty of room for improvement.

Two seniors from the basketball team have just taken off their uniforms for the last time, and off comes the headsets for this pair of seniors. As goes the senior class, so goes ED 91.

On The Side Lines

Trainers Prepare Athletes for Games

Often overlooked, the trainers are just as important to a team than the coaches or team moms. Many times, it is the trainer that dictates whether or not an athlete is prepared and healthy enough to enter battle.

The trainer must be able to relate, listen and understand the body of the athlete that they are caring for. This interaction between trainer and athlete is vital for proper diagnosis and treatment. For this reason, it is no coincidence that many trainers themselves have an athletic background; much is the case here at Warren Central.

"Since most high school athletes will not become pros, they respect what each other does to prepare," head athletic trainer, Mr. Denny Dilts said. "Athletes relate better to other athletes. They relate to what it takes everyday to get better."

After passing the basic training class at Warren Central, the student-trainers are required to serve others, have a good attitude, be willing to learn more about their job and express interest in a certain sport. Once the teainer selects a sport, the trainer will follow that team through practices and games making sure the athletes are healthy and ready to play.

Also, the student-trainer is expected to arrive at the team's practice roughly an hour early with a medical kit, splints and ice. While practice or games are in action, the trainer must focus and be aware of the potential injuries that may occur.

Senior trainer Aryaun Smith, who is also a member of the softball team, became interested in student-training after tearing her anterior cruciate ligament (ACL) in her left knee during her freshman year.

"When you are an athlete, you learn how to prevent injuries. At the same time, when you are a student-trainer you also learn how to prevent injuries. Being an athlete and student-trainer go hand-in-hand," Aryaun said.

UNITY AT THE POLE

Fellowship of Christian Students meet to discuss faith

An eclectics assembly of students joins hands in a large circle around the flag pole outside the Performing Arts Center at 7:00 in the morning in silence. Eyes closed, heads bowed, Warren students participated for about 20 minutes in the nation day of prayer, See You at the Pole.

This event was sponsored this year, and has been in years past, by Warren's Fellowship of Christian Athletes. See You at the Pole was held on August 15 with senior Sarah Bocik heading it.

"This was the best turn out for See You at the Pole ever," she said. "You could just feel the unity." This was very noticeable with the 100+ students in attendance.

"I thought it was an awesome time for Christians to come together," Sarah said. "It's so positive because it helps people know they're not alone, especially in a school so massive. It's always great to know there's others out there trying to make a difference."

The Fellowship of Christian Athletes is a small group that meets upstairs in Ms. Moeller's room every Friday at 7 a.m. Their purpose is simple, but in most cases unallowed in a school setting: to worship and discuss their faith. The name is a bit misleading, there is only a handful of kids who are athletes in the group. It's open to anyone willing or wanting to express opinions about beliefs, or just have time during the school week to have time with God.

Junior James Allen co-heads the FCS with head Greg Curran. "I've been in the FCA since freshman year, and I've just always had a passion for learning about God, so I thought what a better way to learn and do that."

FCS members also gather in an entry way in the G hallways during passing periods to pray.

"It's so positive because it helps people know they're not alone."

SENIOR MICHAEL DEMING and Junior Ramiro Rincones help pass out maps of the campus during the fall parent teacher conferences. Ambassadors helped out at events such as Career Fest to help direct guest at Warren.

Athletics are not always about competing on the field. The most successful teams are ones that have "it". "It" is chemistry. This chemistry is developed off the playing field between both coaches and teammates.

Traditionally at Warren Central, teams have developed this sense of chemistry through fundraisers. Not only does the team gain chemistry through the fundraiser, they earn a few extra dollars to spend on various trips and items throughout the season.

One of the longest fundraising traditions has been the men's and women's cross country teams annual car wash that has been held for nearly 20 years at the beginning of the fall sports season. Their efforts raise roughly $1,000 each year, which is spent on the team's overnight trip to the Culver Invitational, a variety of awards, and t-shirts.

"The car wash is a fun way the girls and boys cross country teams can do something together," men's cross country coach Joe Brooks said.

However, the men's soccer team began a new tradition this year with a car wash of their own. The approximately $1,200 was raised to help pay for the new equipment and renovations that were made at the soccer stadium over the summer.

"The car wash helped unite the team because we all had the common goal of making money for the soccer program. It definitely improved both moral and chemistry," team captain Robert Carney stated.

Weightlifting program lifts football team over other state contenders

THERE'S more to the game of football than X's and O's, team meals, pep talks, and game days. There's also the nitty gritty work that has to be done in and out of the season to be physically ready to compete with the big boys. That includes watching video, learning the playbook, and yes, weightlifting.

Of course it's not the most fun thing to do in the world. But it's something that has to be done in order to be on top of the totem pole in Indiana high school football. To be able to compete with the Ben Davis's, Fort Wayne Snider's, and Penn's of the world, the key to success is to outwork them in all facets of the game. It's something that the Warrior coaching staff has been preaching since day one.

There's no question that hard work in the weightroom has equaled success for the Warriors. One individual, senior linebacker and special teams standout Steve Parker attributes much of his success to his body building.

"The weight program has done a lot for me," Steve said. "It has allowed me to become stronger, quicker, and an overall better athlete."

One phase of the game that Warren excels in is their speed on both sides of the ball. The quickest reaction can change the whole mentality of the game.

Many teams always have an answer to overcome another team's prowess, and they try to stick with that gameplan in order to find success. However, a substantial amount of teams do not have an answer to overcome speed in many cases.

"Our weight program is the core of what we do," Head Coach Kevin Wright said. "We are a physical team with speed and that's something that takes work."

Another aspect the weight program assists is the elimination of injuries. A team's injuries cannot be totally avoided. But if players work hard on getting in the right shape and are ready for the season-long pounding they expect weekly, the team will have all players readily available down the regular season stretch and into the postseason.

"In two years we have had only one kid each year who started the first game but not the last because of injury," Coach Wright said.

During the summer break the daily grind does not slow down. On top of the fact that they have to go out and play football, they lift twice a week with an emphasis on their core lifts of power cleans, squats, and bench presses.

With the significance put on weight lifting, Warren can gain over other programs that do not have the same opportunities as Warren does. The team is aware that not everybody has the same chances and must take advantage of the situation that they were blessed with.

"We are committed to winning state championships, thus our kids must be committed to getting bigger, faster, and stronger," Coach Wright said. "Weak teams do not win championships in any sport!"

THE WARRIOR FOOTBALL team hoists the 2004 Class 5A State Championship trophy following their victory over Fort Wayne Snider. It was the Warriors second consecutive State championship.

Sweet Repeat

Different story, same result as Warriors defend State championship

FOR the first couple games of the season, the Warren Central football players went out onto the field without their names on the back of their jerseys. It may have been a very miniscule issue, but it pretty much sums up what kind of situation the players were going into this season.

After losing 42 seniors from the 2003 championship team, the Warriors were expected to be a solid team that could possibly make a run deep into the postseason. But not very many expected what would occur this season. Other teams already knew the name on the front of the jerseys, but how many could name the players sporting those uniforms?

On top of the team's identity crisis lies the fact that they only had 25 seniors. With players like 2004 Mr. Football and quarterback Desmond Tardy, wide receiver Christian Graham, linebacker Chris Graham, running back Mark Bonds, offensive lineman Andrew Campbell, and defensive lineman Craig Henderson leaving for Division I universities, it looked like it would be an uphill battle and the returning lettermen knew they needed to step up.

Prior to the start of the season, the senior players were required to speak in front of the underclassmen. During senior linebacker Paul Washington's speech, he expressed the team's motto that "Tradition Never Graduates."

"I told the team we had to focus on making names on the front of our jerseys in order to make ones on the back, while defending a state title at the same time," Paul said.

Now that the team has captured two championships in as many years, the players and coaching staff can recollect about the memories.

"The first was harder because we 'hoped' we could do it," Paul said. "After the first one was in the bag, we knew we could do it again if we kept our eyes on the prize."

Head Coach Kevin Wright agrees with that statement.

"The first was harder," Coach Wright said. "Now the kids believe we can do it every year if we work hard and stay focused."

Warren's success hasn't come without hurdles they had to overcome. Warren has to defeat stout Metropolitan Interscholastic Conference foes on a regular basis year-in and year-out. That may seem like a tough hill to climb, but that's just one of the many challenges the Warriors are faced with all the time.

"The biggest obstacle was keeping the young guns focused," Paul said. "We had a few bad apples and bumps in the road but once we overcame them we used the adversity as a learning experience and turned it into an opportunity to become victorious."

That said, the sight of the Warren Central football team in the state championship game could easily be an annual experience that fans can anticipate for years to come.

JUNIOR BRITTANY RENNIER receives serve to put the Warriors on the offensive. Although the team was inexperienced at the varsity level, they managed to put together a successful 21-11 season.

New Identity

Young team continues its tradition of success without any seniors in lineup

THERE comes a time when a team has to find its own identity and make a new name for themselves. The girls' volleyball team had to make a statement after everyone doubted them when all the stars had graduated; no one knew the girls' names at the start of this season nothing mattered there was only a jersey number and the name Warren on the front.

It was time for a new era to begin. It was the girls time to prove they are just as good as the ones before them, and can be better.

The ladies this year ended their season 21-11 and took a tough second round lost in the sectional tournament.

Though the ladies' season had an unfortunate end the ladies gained more than they lost during this season.

The volleyball team and head coach Dan Hagist started the season off shredding the volley nets and turned any doubters heads after winning four of their first five matches including first place in the Ritter Invitational Tournament. The ladies continued to burn night after night, looking as if they had played together for years. At one point setting up a spike for a teammate looked natural. Between Josie Harvey's kills and the way Jenna Castner digs, whispers of championships blew around the locker room.

The ladies through mid season then hit a snag, injuries elled the team and close losses made the ladies start to point fingers, and the team began to look like the young and inexperinced team they were. Everything shifted. Morale was down and the girls dropped the next four games and people started to say, "I told you so."

"I could not play for the girls it is up to them to come together on the court," Coach Hagist said.

The girls toughed the slump out and had to go through their growing pains. Luckily enough the girls came out of their deep sleep and jumped back into the race to prove that they were more than just potential. Brittany Oliver, Josie Harvey, Jenna Castner, Kylie Kent, and Tabitha Ulenhake were just a few of the powerhouse phenoms, that wanted to make sure their team was where it was supposed to be.

A young team with no seniors and the loss of a seasoned team and an all-star athlete in Brianna Cunningham, fans thought the team was in a downward spiral and should look to next year.

The girls did just the opposite they didn't give up. They proved they were contenders and were more than just a team with potential.

The volleyball team won their next four games and didn't look back. They found their own identity through their rollercoaster ride of a season and even better they became a team.

The volleyball team won three different tournaments this season on their way to a 21-11 season.

Junior Josie Harvey transends over the net to spike the ball through the opponent's blockers. As one of the more experienced players on the team, Josie was looked to for leadership and making the big plays.

IN most cases, seniors are suppose to be the leaders and set the records. Sophomore De'Sean Turner though redefines that order. His own skill of running takes the sport to a whole new level.

The sophomore has topped practically every opponent he has faced. Teammates, opponents, anybody might as well call him unstoppable. And the crazy thing about it is that he still has two years left under his belt.

Last season, De'Sean accomplished more than average. He made All-Conference, All-Sectional, All-Regional, All-Semi-State, and All-State teams while breaking the freshman 4K and 5K records. De'Sean also won the County last season with a time of 16:04.

This season, De'Sean accomplished the same and more. He was selected to All-Conference, All-Sectional, All-Regional, All-Semi-State, All-County, and All-State just like last year. He also had one more amazing feat: his worst finish in any race was third place.

When the team went to County, they finished third. De'Sean won County for the second season in a row. In the 5,000-meter race, he finished with a 15:27. He improved from last year's time by 37 seconds. De'Sean did not even stop running hard there. Afterwards, the team went to the MIC Tourney meet where they finished third all together and De'Sean was the overall top runner in the event.

The big event was next, the State Championship. In order for the entire team to have competed in the event, they needed a higher position than eighth place in semi-state. Although the team did not qualify to compete in the IHSAA State Cross-Country Championship, De'Sean and Tim Armstrong qualified for the 5,000 meter race. In the event, 171 racers competed and it only included the best of the best in the state. Even getting last place in the competition was still a great accomplishment for these runners. Tim finished the race 67th with a time of 17:16. It placed him in the top 75 of the field in state.

De'Sean placed third. The first place finish had a time of 16:06. De'Sean finished the race with a 16:10. He was only four seconds off of first place and only two seconds off of second.

The accomplishments of De'Sean were amazing, but never count out the importance of a team. The boys' cross-country team bounced all around the top ten rankings this year. They were all the way up to third and all the way down to ninth. Being in the top 10 all season is something not all teams can do.

Memorable events this year for the team happened at the Harrison Invitational and the Maconaquah Invitational where the team finished first at both events. This superior season for the team will forever be a memorable one especially for De'Sean.

What It Takes

Lady Warriors go the extra mile to compete with top contenders

RUNNING is not just physical ability. It is also involves a great deal of mental attitude. In order to run the cross-country distances like these girls do, runners have got to have the right set of mind where nothing can stand in their way.

For the whole 15 to 25 minutes of running that grueling track, a pace must be set to be ran the whole time. Moreover, right when the finish line is in sight, the sprint comes into play in order to catch anyone who is about a couple seconds ahead.

Then passing them, it is like poker in a strange way. The runner wants to yell out "Ha, I beat you!" loud but no, she keeps sprinting only thinking in her mind that she moved up. Yeah, the life of cross-country is great and competitive.

Few students in this school can go out and do what these runners do everyday. Students may ask what does it takes to become a cross-country runner. Well, to sum it all up... Gatorade. No, not really. Although Gatorade keeps the girls fueled up, it is just a very small factor that helps them keep moving.

It really takes heart, dedication, stamina, and other things. Many factors go into running cross-country. Most of the factors must be earned by practice, practice, and more practice. Three of the most important things needed are agility, quickness, and endurance.

Has it already been mentioned that in order to meet all of the factors in running that practice is needed? Practicing is what has guided the girls through the season. They do not sit around like some people who do nothing around the house and eat chips, watching television. These girls run whenever the opportunity is available.

No matter what the condition: rain, snow, sleet, fog, they will go outside and run forever practically. If conditions are so bad that they can not go out and run, there is always the fieldhouse. There are no limits to what these girls can do when it comes to vigorous training on running.

The team this year experienced many challenges and many bumps in the road. No matter how bad of a streak occurred or how good of a streak was appearing, each team member gave it their all. The teamwork was always there.

"I like that everyone runs the same race and we compete as a team," said sophomore Latasha Williams.

The girls were never ranked in the season, but the team kept at their own comfortable pace. The team had five All-Sectional winners: Bethany Ballard, Erin Cole, Whitney Turner, Carly Weidman, and Latasha Willams.

The future looks very promising for these young girls. Brittany Jones is the only senior leaving from the team. The rest of the team will be returning, which includes twelve newly stated seniors. Like any other team, the girls cross country will be eyeing the big prize next time around. With their returning juniors, their chances of a good season, is just around the corner.

JUNIOR ERIN COLE leads fellow junior teammates Whitney Turner and Bethany Ballard as they travel to the finish line together. The team's main focus this year was teamwork.

SOPHOMORE ROB CARNEY winds up to take a shot at goal in the County opener versus Southport. The Warriors were able to advance out of the first round of County with an exciting 2-1 overtime victory.

New Beginning

Team adjusts to third coach in as many years and another new system

THE boys soccer team started off this year's season wanting to improve. This year, however, was bound to be different. The entire boys soccer program went through a massive renovation. The team received brand new equipment along with a new head coach, Isang Jacob.

Coach Jacob brought his own unique character to this year's team, but also something more special and valuable. He brought a ray of hope hidden within a simple, yet very powerful motto. That motto quickly came to stand as a definition of this year's season: "Rebuilding the Tradition."

Rebuilding is exactly what Coach Jacob did. In the beginning the players struggled to try and adjust to Coach Jacob's new style of coaching. As the season progressed, though, so did their game play. By the end it was obvious that Coach Jacob was making a big impact on the team.

"Having a new coach is always hard for anyone because you have to get used to what he expects and what he likes," Captain Robert Carney said.

Just like in every other rebuilding project, the old must first be destroyed. The soccer team was no exception to this. This year's preseason was devoted to learning all of Coach Jacob's expectations and strategy, as well as destroying old habits and replacing them with new, better ones.

"It was a lot harder from last year. He was a more disciplined coach and we weren't as disciplined," Machy Magdalinos said, identifying the struggle to adjust to their new coach.

Robert agreed. "I enjoyed having him as a coach because he is very passionate about what he does and his trainings are intense."

When the preseason finally ended, they were ready for their first game against Hamilton Southeastern. The team's performance surpassed even the coach's expectations, once thought by the team to be too high. With their big game the team found their spirits boost and their expectations soared.

Their following game against Heritage Christian brought then back to reality. They failed to add their first win to their total. The team reached a major turning point in their season when they realized that the talent and ability to win were there, but they would need motivation and determination to go along with it.

Slowly the team was able to rebuild their team step-by-step to a higher stature than it was when they began.

With the end of the season, a new, stronger team had been formed.

"We improved greatly though our record didn't show it," Robert said. "I think we did a good job of rebuilding the tradition in the sense that we represented Warren better and we became better people."

Machy agreed with the team's improvement after the season's end. "We improved from last year. We could have done better though. We came together as a team near the end of the year. We just couldn't pull it off. I think we made a step closer to rebuilding [the tradition]."

Junior Defender Machy Magdalinos sends the ball up field on a free kick in the Warriors third of the field. Machy tied for the team lead in goals and was an essential part of the defense.

Playing to Win

Soccer team strives off individual skills to compete with the best

"I think this was our strongest girls' team ever," Head Coach Gary Roberts said.

The girls soccer team rounded out one of their best seasons ever in the history of Warren Central. And, it wasn't because of a great performance by one or two players, it was a superb effort from all of the team members which helped them in having winning season.

"It's hard to single out two or three [players]. We had 10 or 12 players that played hard every minute of every game," Coach Roberts said.

In a game in which every second counts and where the entire season can change in the blink of an eye, having at least one player who can play hard throughout the entire game is great. To have an entire team do it is invaluable.

This year's team proved that strength doesn't lie with the heart of one player, rather in the heart of all its players. Multiple players stepped up to the challenges of this season and accepted a role of leadership. Some helped guide the younger players on the team, guiding them to do well, while others guided team members on the field, helping to keep them motivated, even in the toughest of games.

Junior Courtney Roberts, who was selected to be a member of multiple county teams as well as a member of the district team, was a leader on and off the field. She helped out younger players and also led the team on the field, helping to motivate them.

"I step up and help them out on the field. I tell people it's okay if they screw up." This kind of attitude within each of the players is what helped lead them to their great success.

Many of the players were ranked as top players through the city and conference. Courtney, Ashley Seehase, Sarah Phelps, Stephanie Byrd, Cara Burchett, and Elena Lopez were all members of All-County teams. Courtney, Ashley and Sara were members of district teams. Ashley went as far as becoming a member of the MIC team.

The assistance that these players offered to the team helped in boosting them to its stature and strength, making them feared across the city, and even the state.

"We were able to play so evenly with the best teams in the state. We went to the wire with some of the top teams in the state, including the team that won state," Coach Roberts said.

Unlike past years, the team was playing for more than just to play. They played to win this year. Every game, every player gave 100 percent.

"This year we were upset when we would lose a game,". Courtney said, identifying the difference from a loss this year from a loss last year.

CONTROLLING THE BALL in the offensive third of the field, co-captain Courtney Roberts looks to create an attempt on goal. Part of the team's success this season was due to their ability to maintain possession and create good opportunities at goal.

JUNIOR MARCUS THOMAS pushes the ball strong up the lane against a Hamilton Southeastern defender. Warren Central won the game 60-51 to begin the season with three straight wins.

Tough Breaks

Young basketball team perseveres through tough season and Sectional

TOUGH is the only word used to describe the boys basketball schedule. The boys faced many challenging opponents, and on so many occasions never proved themselves as a force to be reckoned with.

The team had many advantages that could have created a good season, such as seven returning players with varsity experience. Perhaps their biggest advantage was the oncoming of nationally ranked freshman, Walter Offutt. His presence on the court was dominant, but he wasn't a one-man show.

"Playing varsity as a freshman was an experience that I took complete advantage of, but I feel like there are many things that we still needed to work on," said Walter.

The beginning of the season started off well with wins against Gary Wallace, Greenfield Central, and Hamilton Southeastern, but the glory didn't last long.

Many of the games were close and down to the wire with a point difference almost never under ten.

"A lot of the games would slip through our fingers within the last few minutes of a game," said junior Marcus Thomas.

The end of the season did not get any better. The team suffered a 44 point blowout by Pike during the County Tournament. They also faced MIC opponents North Central, Carmel, and defending state championship Lawrence North, loosing to all three.

Even though the boys finished the regular season with a .500 record, they had a chance to prove themselves going into the state tournament.

The team drew Arlington for the first round of Sectionals. Arlington had been ranked number one for most of the season and was ranked number three in the nation. No one gave the Warriors a chance.

The boys started the game off slow and quickly found themselves down by seven points in the first quarter, but they soon learned to keep up with Arlington's fast tempo. They made a rally late in the first half to pull within four points at halftime, 24-28.

The second half was simply trading buckets and the game seemed as if it were on a teeter-totter.

In the fourth quarter, the boys pulled within two with a steal and a dunk by Walter. With about a minute left and a score of 55-57, the boys had two possessions to tie the game. A free throw was missed by Marcus and the Warriors had a turnover, which Arlington converted on.

"We played them last year in the Sectional game and lost, so it hurt when we lost again, but they were a good team," said Marcus.

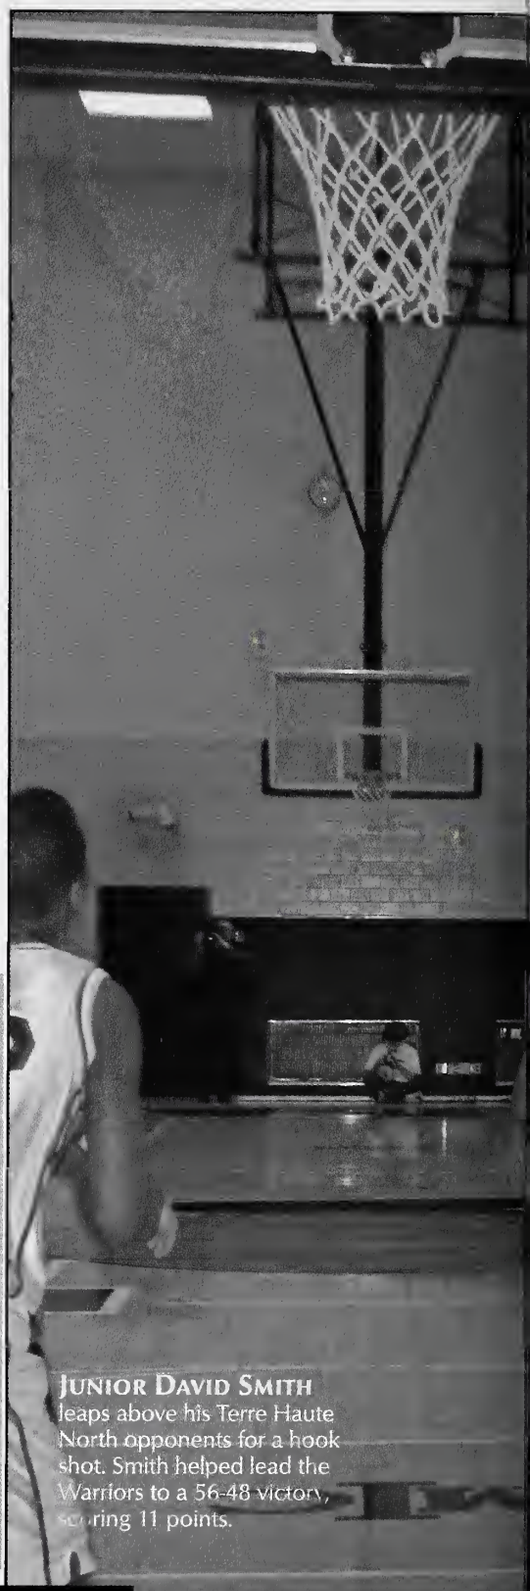
The season was a true test for the young Warrior basketball team. However, they know what can be done to improve in the future and compete with the top programs in a state known as "Basketball Country."



JUNIOR DAVID SMITH leaps above his Terre Haute North opponents for a hook shot. Smith helped lead the Warriors to a 56-48 victory, scoring 11 points.

JUNIOR BETHANY BALLARD traps her North Central opponent against the sideline. The Warriors defense led the way in thier victory over the top ranked team in the state with the final score of 39-38.

So close, yet so far

Lady Warriors stopped again by Cathedral in a Sectional heartbreaker

THE saying "almost doesn't count" means just what it says, that almost succeeding is not enough. The girls basketball team happens to be a perfect example.

The ladies enjoyed much success including an improved record from last season, and came up with a big win over top ranked North Central. They took the game against Class 4A number two Brebeuf into double overtime. They also tied for first place in the MIC Conference with Ben Davis, Carmel, and North Central.

With the regular season ending on a good note, there was plenty of confidence heading into the state tournament. The team got a bye, so they automatically advanced into second round where they faced Tech.

Tech's top ranked guards gave the Warriors a tough time splitting the defense, but the team pulled it together and never looked back after an early first quarter lead. Junior Bethany Ballard led the team in scoring with 15 points and sophomore Jessica Beck added ten.

"The game against Tech was tough, but we were sure going into the game that we were capable of winning," junior Tiffany Finkton said.

The real challenge was the Cathedral Irish. The ladies lost to Cathedral the past two years in Sectionals and had high hopes to end the loosing streak.

They opened the first quarter strong and out-scored Cathedral 9 to 8. In the second quarter they out-scored Cathedral 13 to 11. The game was meticulous and close down to the very end. In the last six seconds, Cathedral's guard Lauren Sturtnevant made a driving bank shot to take the lead and win the game with a final score of 43-44. The game would have given the school it's 13th sectional crown and the first since 1991.

"Since they beat us last year in Sectionals, this was not only to advance to Regionals, but also revenge. Unfortunately we never got to capitalize on the opportunity," guard Courtnie Williams said.

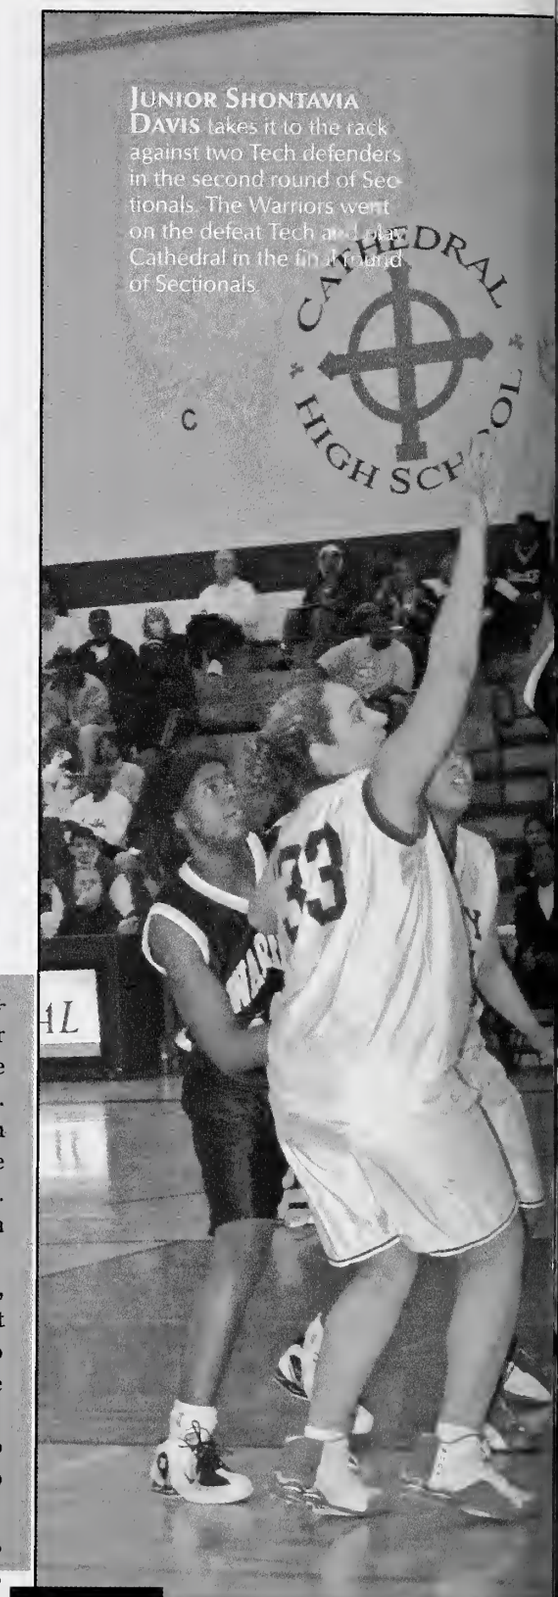
There is only so much a team can do to win and year after year they never seem to do enough.

"If you're a competitor, you want to win, and we tried to put our team in position to win, but Cathedral has our number in the sectional. They are a good team and they expose our weaknesses," Coach Rodger Kirkpatrick said.

Tiffany and Courtnie led the team in scoring, but it was a team effort the entire game.

"No one was discouraged; we were just disappointed at ourselves because we knew what we did wrong," sophomore Anyae Coffer said.

Sectionals seem to be the stopping point for the ladies having a great season, but they were not satisfied because almost does not count.



JUNIOR SHONTAVIA DAVIS takes it to the rack against two Tech defenders in the second round of Sectionals. The Warriors went on the defeat Tech and play Cathedral in the final round of Sectionals.

ROLLING HIS OPPONENT over, sophomore Chris Conte looks to pin 125-pound counterpart from Perry Meridian at Regionals. The Warriors defeated Perry Meridian to advance to Semi-State.

Alike differences

Pair of grapplers share common bond, despite different backgrounds

THEY may seem just like ordinary wrestlers who have tenacity and fire in their eyes. They may have the same mentality to go out and do what it takes to defeat their opponents each and every time they step on the mats. But, although seniors Jacob Wise and Rey Berumen are on complete opposites of the size spectrum, these two Warren Central Warrior grapplers are more alike than what they may seem when seeing them in person.

The lightweight is 112-pound Jacob Wise. The man, who is vertically challenged, has always had to play the role of underdog. He has never had to rely on his size in all his years of playing sports like baseball and football with guys twice his size. In order to overcome that burden, Jacob has always had to give an all-out effort in whatever he has done throughout his life, and that includes when he made it to the state title match at the Conseco Fieldhouse this past season.

Rey Berumen, on the other hand, is the heavyweight. The heavyweight division in the IHSAA is a class for wrestlers who tip the scales at more than 275 pounds. Unlike Jacob, Rey has always been known as the big kid in town. Rey is the intimidating monster that has the ability to topple another person Jacob's size into oblivion.

Once Jacob and Rey got to high school, they both discovered common ground. They were both small in stature compared with the upperclassmen. Since that time, the duo found that Head Coach Jim Ledbetter and his crew had set forth several regiments that all Warrior wrestlers had to follow through with.

Coming into each season, wrestlers have to choose the respective weight class they will compete in for the entire upcoming season. For the lower weight class wrestlers, the game of staying in shape didn't come as easy as Rey's and the rest of the heavyweight competitors did.

"Practice was my source of staying in shape," Rey said. "Unlike the smaller weight classes I didn't have to cut weight."

Rey could have just eaten a steak, if he had the opportunity, while the rest of his Warrior wrestling cohorts gawked through the restaurant's glass eating rice cakes in order to control their weight.

"Running, weightlifting, drilling, and eating nutritional foods such as fruits and vegetables were the key ingredients to my regiment," Jacob said.

As both Jacob and Rey move on to the next step of wrestling for the Rose-Hulman Engineers as teammates once again, as they have at Stonybrook Middle School and Warren Central High School, they realize how far they have come. Both of them have been through thick and thin together and will be the first ones to tell you that the differences in race, culture, height and weight between them don't matter one bit. What these two prove is that the size, whether it be big or small, of the person is not always a factor in the equation of sport. What it all comes down to is hard work, determination, and heart.

Freshmen Job Wise backstrokes down the length of the pool in hopes of improving his individual time. This was the first season that both teams have been able to swim in the newly constructed Fieldhouse natatorium.

Growing Pains

Original goal of the season was to improve individual times

THE goal this year was improvement. From the beginning of the season to the end, the coaches and swimmers alike focused their efforts, not on the winning column, but on the improvement column.

The girls team, though finishing with a record of 2-15, surpassed the original goal to improve their times. At the beginning of the season an evident divide separated the swimmers from one another. The coaches noticed the effect it was having on their times and overall performance as a team. Through many sitting downs and team exercises, new bonds and understandings formed.

"Their adhesiveness as a group has improved," head coach George Fastrich explained. "At the end of the year they came together as a team."

The boys followed the same path as the girls. Their problems came as a result of their form. The coaches spent many practices devoted to their form and technique, and as the season progressed, just like the girls, their strokes and technique improved.

Though their bonds and performances as a team improved, many swimmers also improved individually, which was one of the team's original hopes.

On the boys team, Robert Dillon dropped his 100-meter fly time 12 seconds by the end of the season. Freshman Wesely Becker dropped his 200-meter freestyle time drastically, and sophomore Will Nigh dropped his 500 freestyle time from 6:25 at the beginning of the season to 5:47 at the end.

On the girls team, senior Katie Klacik dropped her 500-meter freestyle time down from 6:20 to 6:01. Freshman Cary Patterson also improved her time in the 500-meter freestyle, jumping from 6:40 at the beginning of the year, to 6:19 at the end. Bethany Hair improved her 100-meter breaststroke time from 1:53 to 1:51.

These times are just a few of many improvements. Nearly all of the swimmers improved their times from their previous seasons, whether it was here at Warren or at one of the middle schools.

"We saw a lot of times drop in both boys and girls," Coach Fastrich commented about their sectional performances.

Among the many strong performers in that meet were freshman sisters Marie and Melinda Black. Marie finished eighth in front of her sister, who pulled off a strong tenth place finish, in their event.

Also showing a worthy performance in that meet was the 200-meter freestyle team. The team, which consisted of Cary Patterson, sophomore Holly Moore, freshman Ashley Miller and freshman Sasha Banister, worked their hardest all season to come out with a great finish. They represented Warren well, earning a sixth place finish.

Though neither the boys or girls team boasted a record worthy of a second glance, it was their consistent drive to improve that proved to be an excellent mascot for what a Warrior really is.

Senior Maja Michaelsen performs the backstroke as she looks to add points to the Warriors score. Although the team's record did not reflect their effort, individually each member improved greatly throughout the season.

Top gymnast battles through adversity in return to State glory on the mat

TO begin the 2005 season, the gymnastics team already found themselves without one of their best gymnasts. Junior Leslie Elliott, who competed in State last season, decided to compete in club gymnastics.

In the first half of the season Leslie competed in club gymnastics instead of joining the high school team. But when Leslie came back to the high school team, she made a big improvement in helping the team win.

"We were so excited to have Leslie come back," Coach Deb Bruns said.

In the Marion County Tournament Leslie stepped up big helping the team come away with a second place finish, coming up short against the Lawrence Central Bears. Leslie finished first in the balance beam with an outstanding score of 9.452 and finished third in the all-around performance.

Again the team came up with a great finish in the MIC conference, finishing second out of eight teams.

"Despite some injuries throughout the season the team performed with excellence," Leslie stated.

With a respectable 22-9 record and a strong victory in the final regular season match against the North Central Panthers, the team was very optimistic going into Sectionals. Unfortunately the Warriors came up short finishing fourth out of 11 teams, with only the top three teams advancing on to Regionals.

Individually Elliott placed fourth out of six competitors in the all-around performance with a score of 36.975, which was good enough to advance her onto Regionals.

Leslie had an equally strong performance in Regionals scoring a 9.15 on the balance beam, a 9.75 on the floor exercise, and a 9.40 on the uneven bars. These scores combined for a 37.025 in the all-around performance placing her second and advancing her into the state competition. The score of 37.025 also set a school record, breaking the previous record of 36.90, which was held since 1981.

At State, Leslie competed against 40 other gymnasts. She competed in the balance beam, uneven bars, floor exercise, and the vault. But before Leslie could finish, she suffered an injury, that shattered her hopes of being a state champion. The events she did complete in were the uneven bars with a score of 8.725 and the balance beam with a score of 8.975.

"The best part of the season was being competitive with some of the toughest teams in the state, not only as an individual, but as a team," Leslie stated after her state competition.

For Coach Bruns this was her last season coaching the gymnastics squad at Warren Central.

"I can say on behalf of the team she will be missed immensely," Leslie said.

Junior Leslie Elliott completes her routine on the balance beam as spectators look on. Elliott made it to State for the second consecutive year.

Juggling Act

Sophomore cheerleader handles the pressure of cheering for three squads

"5, 6, 7 8!" Christina Gegner shouted out as she began to warm-up her jumps for her competition cheerleading practice.

Christina was not just on the competition squad, but also cheered for the varsity football team and the varsity boys basketball team.

"Cheering for a team and competing are two totally different things," Christina stated, "when you're on a competition squad, you only care about the routine and being flawless and when you are cheering for a team, you only care about supporting the team and cheering them to a victory."

The competition squad started with 11 girls and lost four of them. After the fourth girl was gone, the coaches decided to move up three freshmen from the freshmen competition squad.

After the changes had been made, the girls competed at Jamfest Nationals downtown Indianapolis in January and placed fourth.

Christina balanced going for competition practices with going to football and basketball cheerleading practices. "When you are cheering for the team, that is all you care about," Christina explained.

During competition cheerleading, girls cheer during a routine for two and a half minutes. Those two and a half minutes can seem like an hour when girls are on stage looking out at a panel of judges and a huge crowd. "All I think about when I am competing is being perfect and not letting down the rest of the squad," Christina said. Competitions are more about timing than cheering for football. A routine must be exactly two and a half minutes long so there will not be a deduction for timing.

While cheering for football, the squad is cheering for about two hours or more. Cheerleaders for a sport are not at a constant cheer though like competition. The squad rotates doing chants, crowd involvement, cheers, and mounts during the time they are cheering at the games. If a girl messes up, the crowd probably will not notice and she can continue her cheer like she did not mess up.

Competitions are concentrating on being as perfect as possible because every mistake means points off the score, which puts a lot of pressure on the girls. The girls cannot mess up because they do not want to let the rest of their squad down. If a girl makes a single mistake, it could cause the rest of the squad to mess up, like during mounting.

While Christina mounts, she is a back . If she does not help the flyer up, then the flyer might fall, which would cause major deductions off of the squad's score.

During football and basketball games, the pressure of the judges is taken off, but the pressure is not. There are the students watching the cheerleaders, anticipating the next mistake.

But no matter who they were cheering for or which squad they were cheering on, it was the spirit that counted.

Long Gold Line

Warren tops number one team in state to win 41st Warren Relays and finishes 2nd in State

IT'S six o'clock on a warm Thursday night, finals and class projects are beginning and the stress and tension in the school is making its annual rise. On the track, however, all of that is nothing. Because at 6:00 p.m. on the first Thursday of May is the Warren Relays.

Each athlete that competes in the Warren Relays, whether they run fast or slow, throw far or short, jump high or low, leave their footprints and mark on, what head coach Dennis McNulty refers to as, the "Long Gold Line."

"There was a lot of drama," Coach McNulty said, describing the four-point margin of victory at this year's memorable Warren Relays.

Warren played host to seven teams from across the state, many were distinguished as being some of the best teams in state, including Lawrence Central, who, at the time, was ranked first in state. For all of these teams, Warren Relays was a break from the banality of the usual meet and a refreshing new look at the sport.

Warren Relays is conducted differently than any other meet the Warriors run in. Every event is a relay, including the field events (shot put, discus, long jump, high jump, pole vault). The teams provide two people in field events and four in track events to make a relay team to compete in the chosen event.

In this year's meet, Warren won five of the seven events, two of which, the sprint medley and distance medley relays, were new school records. Warren battled the entire night with Lawrence Central. The tension between the two increased after Warren suffered a hard loss to them earlier in the year on the very same track at the first annual Twilight Invitational.

This time around Warren won, but not easily. The meet lasted for four hours, including a power failure which occurred after a transformer blew up. At about 9:30 that night however, all the track events were finished and only the pole vault was competing. Warren was leading the meet by a moderately comfortable margin of six points. Lawrence Central sat in second and quickly tallied the scores to find that if Warren would win the meet if they finished higher than third.

There were four teams left. Warren had to out-vault at least one of the teams in order to win the meet. Needless to say the tension was extremely high. Both teams lined the pole-vault runway to watch Senior Daniel Spillman and junior Jimmy Hodges vault.

Holding the weight of the meet on their shoulders, Daniel and Jimmy both easily cleared the 12-foot mark. At 12 feet and 5 inches, the team from Center Grove fell out and Warren clinched the victory. Daniel and Jimmy would continue onward to jump 13 feet, and a combined 26 feet to finish third to Lawrence Central's acclaimed vaulters.

The Warrior Track team held up the trophy at 10:00 that night. They were all noticeably tired, cold, hungry and yet still happy. The Lawrence Central team could be seen walking back to their bus, defeat undeniably in their walk.

Leading Light

Seniors take over to show young teammates how to win on the road

SOMEHOW some way, every team year after year seems to shape and show characteristics of the senior leaders no matter who they are. The team may be dominated by underclassmen, but when it is crunch time a senior will always come through. When it was all over, the girls track team was no different.

The seniors early in the season displayed their leadership and anxiety to be even better than last years team. In the pre-season meets, which were all indoor and meant nothing in ranking, the seniors wanted to send a message early. The girls competed as if they were in do or die tournaments and went on to win every indoor meet, including the prestigous Indiana Relays where the Warriors ran wild and finished as champions.

The girls really had a big influence on the season early also and continued to set the bar high knocking off five teams in a row before the team's first lost. The seniors held this very high on their value list. After coming off two great seasons, the seniors of this year wanted to prove that they had what it took to continue to winning after some of the team's best players graduated

Everyone glorified the girls track team last year when Mariesa Greene and Brianna Cunningham racked up points in every event and had no competition in the State Tournament.

Amazing senior athletes Megan Giles, Kimmy Reed, Courtney Ware and Lydie Assefa all contributed to the continuing success of the girls track team. The seniors carried this young team, in which many were inexperienced and had out done themselves by having a 10-4 record and ranking in the top five in the state.

There was no easy meet this year and the girl's season was a constant road trip. The girls had only two meets at home and one was cancelled due to bad weather. The girls only meet at home was the Warren relays, in which the last four years our lady warriors had been named M.I.C champions. The team fell short to Lawrence Central and in four years did not successfully defend their title.

"I was mad, and I felt kind of embarrassed to lose the MIC championship because we usually win that meet. Every year I've been here, we have won," said senior Kimmy Reed.

The seniors did not fold, however. They came back with vengeance by all reaching new personal bests. Lydie Assefa made every one of her times drop by seconds and was one of the top ranked runners in state. She was awarded Athlete of the Year award. Megan Giles, a pole-vaulter, took her game to the next level by jumping 11.5, her personal best. Kimmy Reed broke the school's girls' shot put record with a 45.6' throw, and after she broke the record she never threw under 45' the rest of the year.

The seniors may not have accomplished all of what last year's team accomplished. Gold and silver plaques or medals are not everything. Hard work, dedication, heart, and leadership is what will never be forgotten about this team.

JUNIOR MEGAN FANNIN concentrates as she begins her pole vaulting routine. Megan, along with four other pole vaulters, have had success since the pole vault was added to girls competition just last year.

SLIDING BACK TO first base, junior Murphy Bragg attempts to avoid being picked off by a Lawrence Central pitcher. The Warriors fell short to the Bears 6-1 in their first loss of the season.

New Sherriff

Team stuggles in rebuilding year with new coach, different system of play

CH-CH-CH-CH changes. The sentiments shared in David Bowie's 1972 classic hit portrays a striking resemblance to what occurred between last season and the start of the 2005 season for the varsity baseball team.

Brian Murphy, who coached at Speedway, was now in charge of the club and had to do something that not all coaches can successfully do at the first meeting; win over the players.

When Coach Murphy walked up to the team for the very first time, senior catcher Zack Sanders' first thoughts were very striking.

"I thought, man that guy is skinny," Sanders said. "I thought he was nice guy with a good sense of humor."

In most cases, a transition such as a coaching change during one's career is the last thing that one wants to experience. It usually means that the coaching isn't up to snuff and quality of the on-field product has been less than par. When a change is made at the top of the heap, that means that the players have to adjust their styles a bit to fit into the new system, whether they like it or not.

"The transition went pretty smoothly as far as personalities," Zach said. "However, it was tough trying to prove to the coach who should play when he had never seen us play before."

Another difference is the fact that Riensche and Murphy are two different kind of people from different eras who have different styles of conveying the game to their players.

"The big difference between Coach Riensche and Coach Murphy is that Coach Murphy has much better game strategy, and he's capable of applying his knowledge of baseball in practices and games," Stephen Parker said.

The sentiments among the players seem to be that they are much happier with Murphy at the helm. Oddly enough, the Warriors had many more wins last season than they had in this most recent season.

But that can be the case in many situations when the players are in a transition mode. Unfortunately for the seniors of this year, they were in a complete rebuilding year.

While Coach Murphy was attempting to rebuild the program up to elite status, the underclassmen from this past season have already experienced a full season of practice and games that will more than likely have them prepared for the toll this season.

However, the seniors don't have the opportunity to utilize what they have learned at the high school level any longer, but they can use the valuable lessons and knowledge they have learned in future circumstances to provide foresight into the future success of the program that they were so very much a part of.

"I can see that Coach Murphy will do a lot for the program," Stephen said. "He does a great job as a coach and communicating with the players. He also takes it well when we give him a hard time about the lack of hair on his head."

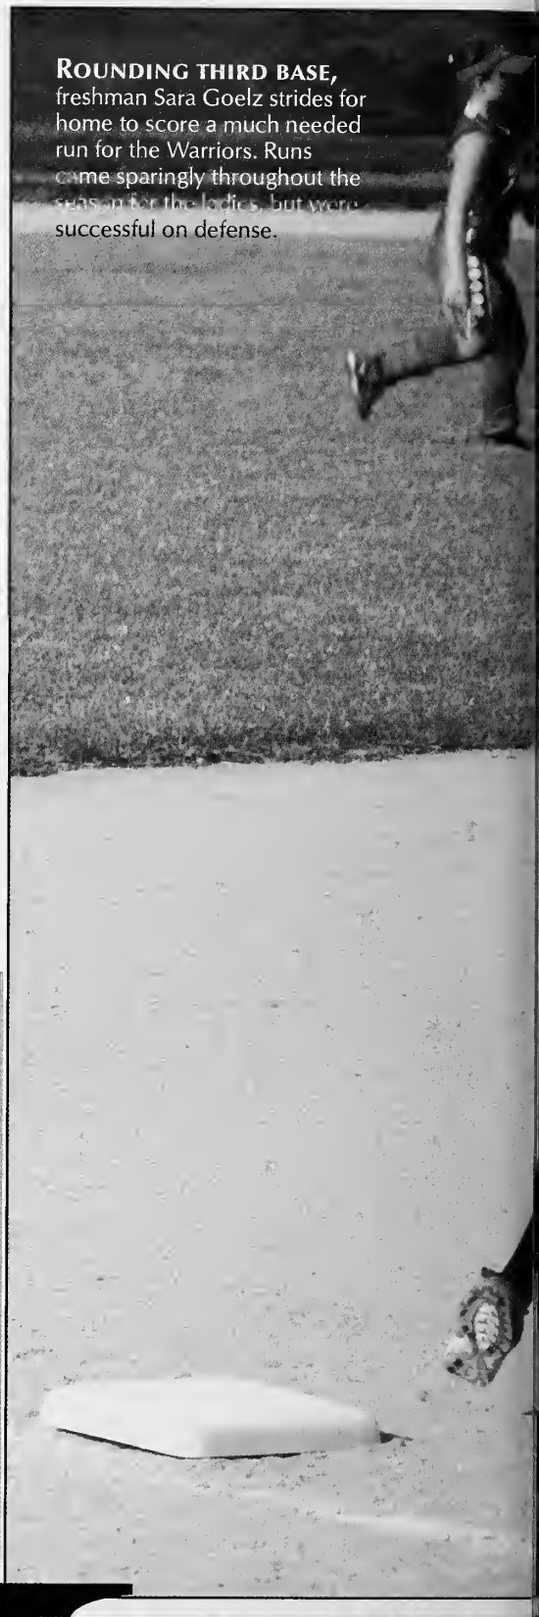
FRESHMAN PITCHER SARA Goelz winds up to deliver a pitch across the plate to a Decatur Central batter. Sara was one of two freshman pitchers who were major contributors to the varsity softball team this year.



ROUNDING THIRD BASE, freshman Sara Goelz strides for home to score a much needed run for the Warriors. Runs came sparingly throughout the season for the ladies, but were successful on defense.

Hitting Woes

Team defense remains strong, but struggles continue with the bat

HITTING, pitching, running, sliding, scoring, winning, losing- the components of softball. The Warren Warriors girls softball team knows that. It was just the problem throughout the season of putting it all together.

The team struggled early in the season starting off 0-3. To get even worse, they were scoreless in all three of the games. They lost 2-0 to Southport, 3-0 to Perry Meridian and 8-0 to seventh ranked Martinsville.

Their first win came in a double-header against Rushville. After losing 4-1, the girls came back strong winning 6-4. Senior Jenny Locke hit two doubles along with a triple while freshman Sara Goelz went five for five for the game.

Slowly but surely though, they started to come together. Underclassmen stepped up and took on their roles earlier than normal.

The team eventually started getting wins, but too many games happened where they ended up scoreless. Their offense had been the single-most devastating problem throughout the season. In a five game stretch against Speedway, Greenwood, Center Grove and Brebeuf, they did not score in four of the five games. In the double-header against Speedway they won 5-0 and lost 1-0. In the other games, they lost 2-0, 2-0, and 1-0.

In the five game skid, freshman Terra Payson pitched the winning game and delivered eight strikeouts. She also pitched against Brebeuf and shut them out until the sixth when they finally scored a run.

"The hardest part throughout the season was definitely just our offense. We couldn't pull it together except for a couple of games. We would either be unstoppable defensively or offensively, but rarely both at the same time," said pitcher Terra.

The batting was not a friend of the team, but the pitching was surprisingly good. Coming into the season the team had a question mark on which their main pitchers were going to be. But with the addition of two freshman pitchers, the team at least had something.

Sara and Terra were the answers to the team's much needed problems. The two soon figured out that they were keeping teams from scoring, yet, teams were also keeping them from scoring.

Sara finished the season with two shutouts along with a reasonable earned run average. Her record was 3-12 which looks bad but then again the run support lacked throughout the season.

Terra ended the season with a record of 3-3 and a very low earned run average. In all three of her wins, she shutout the opposing team.

As the season came to a close, Jenny and fellow senior Angela Gonzalez earned a spot on the all-county team.

Impossible?

MIC conference teams prove too strong against young Warriors

THEY say that the end of the book isn't until the last page, but perhaps the girls tennis season came to an end before the book could even be finished.

The team began practices and conditioning in February, which proved a strong move for picking out the team. The season started out with two huge wins, and the girls were optimistic and ready for more.

Everyday at practice, the girls would run laps, do stretches, and warm up their serves. They had at least two or three matches a week and did off-season work in the summer, fall and winter. The work they did was all to compete with the pressure and challenges of the elite teams in the state.

Unfortunately, their hard work proved to be not quite enough as the season progressed.

The Metropolitan Interscholastic Conference is one of the toughest conferences in the Midwest, and maybe tough isn't a strong enough word. During the tournament, the team came in 7th, one place before last, and their failure to do well in the MIC tournament caused discouragement in the team for the remainder of the season.

The loss could have something to do with the fact that there were two varsity starters missing from the lineup forcing three junior varsity players onto the roster.

"I think that because MIC is the hardest part of our season, when we did not do well, we couldn't bounce back and pick ourselves up," said junior Amanda Toliver.

Next, they had a first round County tournament draw against top-ranked North Central, who is also a MIC team. The girls played hard and competed well, but were swept away 5-0.

The last regular season match against Pike put the icing on the cake. They lost 3-2 and the rude fans, unsportsmanlike conduct from the opposing team ruined the Warren team's spirit going into Sectionals.

Sectionals were the last chance the team had to prove that maybe things were not over. They drew Lawrence North, another MIC conference team, in the first round. This was the third time in the season the two teams faced one another and the results were the same. They lost 5-0.

"Even though we lost, we came really close and gave Lawrence North some competition," said junior Jodi Morgan.

Besides beating Ben Davis, maybe beating the other MIC teams was an impossible dream. But to the girls' credit, they never stopped dreaming and working to improve their game.

At the end of the season, the team found out that neither Coach Gretchen Brooks nor assistant Coach Beth Jahns would be coaching next year for personal reasons.

Much of the team was underclassmen though, so the practices and matches proved great experiences for strengthening skills and good effort for a first year of a relatively new team.

Junior Zach Wright putts during the Marion County Tournament. The Warriors finished third, one stroke behind. Wright was a key assest to the Warriors this season playing in the fifth and sixth position.

Freshman Marie Black figures out the line so she could make the putt. Marie was the number one player on the team this season.

Dynamic Duo

Number one and two golfers combine to be one of state's elite duos

LIKE bread and butter, Shaq and Kobe, and nice rims on an Escalade, senior Josh Thompson and junior Chris Seibel produced the next dynamic duo for the boy's golf team. These two teammates went back and forth in grabbing first place finishes against the competition and helping the Warriors win. The two won a combined nine out of 13 matches this season.

The boys ranked 15th in the state and came away with a third place finish in County. Chris finished third out of 80 players with a score of 75 and had top honors on the team.

"I have been consistently straight and long with my driver this season," said Chris. The conditions during the match were tough for everyone out there. It was very windy and the greens were the fastest the team had played all year according to Chris. "I played okay, you have to get over the first hole jitters and just have a good time," he said.

Josh unfortunately didn't perform up to his full potential in County, finishing with a score of 85 to finish in 20th place. After County Thompson's performances went through rough times on the course, not medaling a match for the next three, not including County. For him that would be known as a slump.

When the North Central Invitational came around, Josh was in peak form, winning the match with a 1-under 71, three strokes better than the rest of the field.

"I managed my game well and gave myself good opportunities to make birdie," Josh said.

The team came up on the short end with a tie for third. "The team played well, just came up a little short," Josh said.

When one of the two didn't perform up to their potential, the other one stepped up. But when they both played good, it's scary.

The teammates performed very well during the Franklin Central Invitational. Josh came away with a strong 74. Seibel helped the team with a score of 75. With these good scores and contribution from the rest of the team the Warriors came away with a 298 the low score of the year against 23 other teams. It included Marion County Champs Lawrence Central, no. 7 Roncalli, and no. 8 Brownsburg.

Josh showed why he was the number one player in the state when he traveled to the Sagamore Club to compete in a qualifying round for the U.S. Open. This event has produced such legends as Jack Nickalus, Ben Hogan, Payne Stewart and Tiger Woods. Josh came away with a score of 73 on a very tough golf course.

"I played well hitting every fairway and I grinded it out on every shot," Josh said.

Unfortunately Seibel came up short. " It was fun, everyone thought the course was tough, I just made a few mistakes at the beginning of the round that I couldn't get out of," Chris said.

Play Ball

First ever wiffleball tournament, other intramurals serve competition

WHAT if there was a place where you could experience intense competition mixed with the undeniable presence of pressure and rivalry? What if you had to rely on teammates who must be just as swift and attentive as you are? What if the slightest slip-up could cost everything?

A Red Sox and Yankees game may come close, but it doesn't compare to the first annual wiffleball tournament here at Warren Central.

Just prior to winter break, students started to organize their teams of four to compete in the wiffleball tournament. At 11:30 on February 12, the 13 teams gathered, ready to compete.

The four hour battle ended with a final game between the team of Seth Painter, Johnny Heck, Coach Paul Siegrest and Jess Holliday and the team of Steve Parker, Murphy Bragg, Tom Sherrill and Matt Parkinson, duking it out to find out who would take home the trophy and become the first ever wiffleball tournament champion. By a dominating score of 7-3, the team of Seth, Johnny, Coach Siegrest and Jess won the game.

"It went well, and it was a lot of fun," Mr. Brian Murphy said. Mr. Murphy, who is in his first year at Warren, suggested and organized this year's tournament and listed as his only regret, that there was only one tournament this year rather than two.

The wiffleball tournament was only one of many different intramural activities that took place at Warren this year. The other intramural activities included the very successful intramural basketball league and a volleyball tournament, which were both organized by counselor and Warrior alumnus Mr. Jeff Massey.

The intramural basketball season had its regular season from February to March, where they entered into the post-season tournament, in which the Spurs rivaled over the Bulls in early April.

The intramural volleyball season also was added as an intramural sport, which both students and faculty participated in.

After plans for a men's volleyball team fell through, even though many students were interested in playing, volleyball found its spot in the new world of intramural sports at Warren.

Also, the intramural volleyball season went well. The faculty team dominated the entire season, finishing undefeated, ending the first year of the sport.

"It fun just getting to play games," Jerry Saffold said, a member of a student volleyball team.

All the intramurals served their purpose. Warren students were given a chance to build new friendships and add to old ones, at school, but not in school, making Warren a place not just to learn, but a place to have fun and be active in sports.

"The best part was that there were baseball players, softball players, tennis players and golfers all playing at the same time. There were athletes and non-athletes playing at one time," Mr. Murphy said.

"Some kids have been out of school for years, some have had periods of no schooling, and others come from a war-torn country," Mrs. Cammie Moody, ESL teacher, said. "So they have a lot more obstacles in their way than just language."

And although in a school of 3,400 the growth was virtually undetectable, the ESL program experienced a steady growth in enrollment. This year the class size increased nearly 33 percent and over 80 percent of those students were Hispanic. In order to keep up with the growing demands of these students and to offer them the best education possible, Warren provided support in both mainstream classes and at home.

"I find that students are either extremely fluent or don't speak a word [of English]," Mrs. Johann Hawks, Counseling Service Center Director, said.

"It's really comforting to the kids to know that someone their own age is trying to help and understand them." Mrs. Hawks

For students who speak very little or no English, the faculty relied heavily upon advanced foreign language students for translations. This provided not only a means of communication but also a sense of community and belonging.

"It's really comforting to the kids to know that someone their own age is trying to help and understand them," Mrs. Hawks said.

Warren also understood that the parents may not be receiving the same English help as their students; therefore, Warren not only offered English classes through the Walker Career Center, they also sent home any publications or mailings in Spanish so that the parents remained an active part of the school. Before any ISTEP scores, GQE results, or letters were sent home, the office delivered them to the ESL classroom for translation, which not only provided for a quick and accurate translation but also allowed the Hispanic students to improve their English-Spanish skills.

Forever FRIENDS

CASEY AND DAVID

Millerbock Brown

How long have you been friends?

Casey: We've known each other since 6th grade, but didn't stop hating each other until 8th.

What is the best memory you have about your friendship with each other?

Casey: I think my best memory would have to be senior spring break and senior wrestling senior.
David: We snuck out and got on Creston's roof in 8th grade or when we snuck out freshman year on my birthday and broke the windows at Creston. Then served community service together in the summer.

What makes your friendship better than others?

Casey: We could get into a fist fight one night and be cool the next morning.
David: When we fight it doesn't last for more than a day and we always think about the same thing without even talking.

David: We like the same things such as: wrestling, friends, and food.

What are some qualities you admire about your best friends?

Casey: He's always the center of attention and we would never let girls come between us.

David: He's smart athletic, funny, and smooth with the ladies (LOL)!

Do you have any future plans together?

Casey: We plan to go separate paths after high school, but I am sure we'll reunite someday.

Breaking the Habit

Jesseca Phillipson was faced with giving up something she felt like she could not live without, coffee. Now to some of you, this may seem easy and could complete this task with much ease, but others, like Jesseca, have a little more trouble giving up their Starbucks. Here is her story as told by her...

In first period, I am already starting to feel the effects of not having coffee. I can not seem to focus on my physics assignment and all I want to do is lay my head down on my desk and take a nap. As two periods have passed, I can not hold my shaky hands still long enough to write my name on my Geometry paper, let alone focus hard enough to come up with any of the answers. When I got home after school, the first thing I did was take two Advil for my splitting headache, followed by plopping down on my bed for a much needed nap. After such a tiring day, I will definitely not be skipping my morning cup of coffee tomorrow.

The word "love" is used in many different ways, what do you think love really is, and how do you know if you truly love someone?

Love is hard to describe because it is more than a word or a feeling. "Love is when someone else needs become more important than your own." You aren't just in love if you have a crush.

Forever FRIENDS

EMMA AND MAGGIE

How long have you been friends?

5 years

What is the best memory you have about your friendship with each other?

Emma: "I think it was in eighth grade, Maggie came up to my family's lake cottage with me for about a week. That's probably a time when we've had the most fun together."

Maggie: "One of the funniest times we had was driving home from Florida the summer before sophomore year. It was a long car ride, but we found funny ways to keep ourselves amused. We were laughing so hard we were crying."

What makes your friendship more unique than others?

Emma: "We have so many inside jokes, it's almost like we speak our own language that no one else gets."

Maggie: "Emma and I get along so well. We never fight and always have a good time together. She is the only person I could spend a long period of time with without getting sick of."

What are some qualities you admire about your best friend?

Maggie most admires Emma because she is fun loving and laid back. Also because she is easy to get along with and has fun no matter what she is doing.

Emma loves that Maggie doesn't care about what other people think of her, and when she has an opinion on something, she's very passionate about her position.

EMMA, MAGGIE AND friend Justine Miller, ring in the New Year together. These girls always had fun doing things like this with one another.

Sweet Sixteen

RHNEA LANHAM, NICOLE Crawford, Samantha Barb, and Emily Bays, all pose for the camera at Emily's Sweet Sixteen Birthday party.

Emily Bays celebrates her sixteenth birthday in style.

Emily had always dreamed of having a big party with all of her friends there and getting whatever a 16-year-old dreams of, a car.

Emily knew her family and friends had planned on having a big party for her, but little did she know there, was more to come. She thought that her mom and her step-father would just be taking her out to eat and shopping, but to her surprise, they had other plans.

When she was waiting for her step-father to pick her and her mom up, she was surprised to find out that a limo showed up instead with a few of her closest friends inside.

The whole day Emily and her friends got to cruise around in the limo, and they videotaped the whole thing too. Once the limo ride was over, Emily and her friends went back to her house where they were met by some more of Emily's friends. The whole night they danced and listened to music and then came time to receive her present from her parents. Her dad came into the room that she was in and handed her a new purse, as she looked inside the purse, she got the surprise of her life, a set of keys!

Emily said without her mom's help in all of this she would have never had such a memorable birthday.

EMILY'S MOM RENTED a limo for her sixteenth birthday. Emily and friends got to ride around in the limo before the party started.

What Stresses you out?

The end of the grading period stresses me out because the teachers pile on so much homework and last minute tests. This time is really stressful because it could make or break my grade.

- Olivia Edens

Getting into car accidents, especially running into parked cars really stresses me out.

- Keith Price

A lot of homework and long, involved projects stress me out when I've got a lot of personal problems at home and at school. It also stresses me out when i hear about people smoking and doing drugs and no one is doing anything about it.

- Brittainey Neese

Whenever some of my really close friends talk behind my back when they have a problem with me and can't ever say it to my face.

TRADITIONS

Did you know...

That the school mascot used to be the "Owls" because two owls were mounted above the main entrance of the school.

That it wasn't until 1940 that the Warrior was the official mascot of Warren Central.

That the school spirit song is not actually "rah rah for Warren," it's actually called the "Praise to Black and Gold" and goes along with the tune of "Love Me Tender." This is how it goes:

"One more song we raise to thee,
As in days of old,
When we pledge our loyalty
And wore the Black and Gold,
Hail to thee! Varsity!
And as years unfold,
Warren, we'll return to sing
In praise of Black and Gold"

That Warren Central's primary school color used to be orange instead of gold chosen by the township trustee because he thought they would stand out.

Forever FRIENDS

TERRA AND GAYLE

PAYSON SMOCK

How long have you been friends?

Gayle and Terra: We have been friends for nine years.

What is the best memory you have about your friendship with each other?

Gayle: My best memories with Terra are playing softball with her and just being together all the time.

Terra: In the sixth grade we went to Kentucky Kingdom and my grandma's together. We had so much fun just goofing around at her house.

What makes your friendship better than others?

Gayle: She likes the total opposite things like guys, clothes and friends. That's the main reason why we are better friends than most because we don't have those things to fight about.

Terra: Just the fact that we've known each other for so long makes our friendship strong. We know practically everything there is to know about each other.

Do you have any future plans together?

Terra: We don't really have any plans together besides going to college. I just hope to stay friends throughout even if we don't attend the same one.

What are some qualities you admire about your best friend?

Gayle: She is a strong person and doesn't care what other people think, but she is a very sensitive person too. I admire her in any way possible.

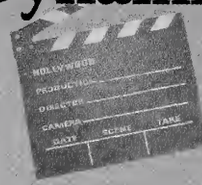
Terra: I've always been shy and sensitive, but after being around her all these years I've definitely changed and she's also just always been there for me.

WHAT'S HOT

Hottest Reality T.V. Show: Fear Factor

I like Fear Factor because half the time they have good-looking women in swimsuits and because of the stunts - Carlos Quinones

Hottest Movie: Napoleon Dynamite



I like Napoleon Dynamite because he is so dang cool. He is like the brother I never had. He and I are alike in so many ways. He uses chapstick, and I love chapstick. He stuffs food in his pockets, and that is so funny. He has the best hair-do ever. - John Wendt

Hottest Breakout Artist: Ciara

I like Ciara because she can dance. She has moves that no one has seen before or can duplicate. Ciara is one of the few artist that can sing and dance at the same time and actually do it well.

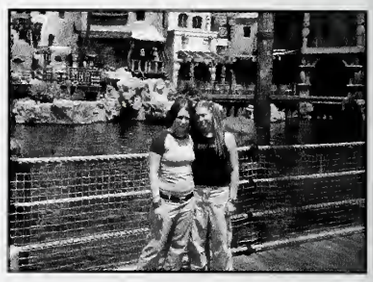
It's hard to write something for the yearbook that has not been written before. It seems that all the senior ads say the same thing, but this is our tribute to you. You make us proud. You have always worked so hard to achieve in school. You have stayed true to your values and principles and that is not always easy to do. Raising you has been a joy and honor. We sometimes wonder what we did so right. We know you will make a difference in this world.

We love you,
Mom, Dad, and Casey



Cayla Messenger

It seems like it was only yesterday that you were climbing those big steps of the bus for your first day of kindergarten and how hard it was for us to let you go. Now you're taking those big steps into adulthood, and it's still hard to let you go, but you'll make it. Just remember, we're always here for you. You mean the world to us.

We love you,
Dad, Mom, and "your best bud, your brother" Cameron

Kellie Griner

Congratulations! We can't believe our baby girl is graduating from high school. We've watched you grow into a beautiful young lady. We are so very proud of you and your accomplishments. The memories and friends you have made will last forever...especially Back-to-Back State Championships as a football manager!! Good luck in college. We will always be there for you.

Love,
Mom, Dad, and Stacie

Tess Agnelneri

Before you were born, I would often read a quote from Kahil Gabran that reminded me of my role in your life. I have worked to live this role to bring you to your future. Now, the future is wide open to you and will take you to places only you can imagine.

Tess, you are our joy, our blessing sent and given to us by God. You are one of the most intelligent, loving, kind, and fair people we know. You can also be a force of nature that can't be contained- but we have learned to manage you to some degree. Keep that fire burning- it will serve you well in life.

Thank you for sharing your life with us! We have learned about football - can you believe it! - and cheerleading, about leadership, and what true dedication is. Keep sharing- we are learning so much!

Keep your focus on where you plan to go- we are behind you and will always be in front of you with open arms.

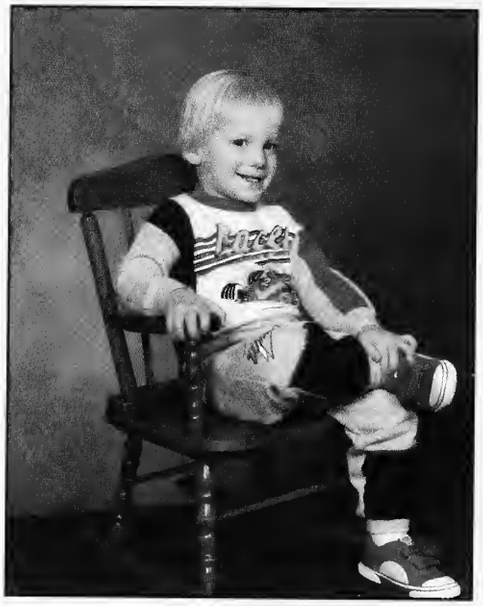
Love,
Mom, Dad, and Alyssa

Max Reinhardt

We are all proud of you!

Love,

Dad, Mom, Kristy, Holly, and Sandy



Tiffany Thomas

Congratulations! We are so proud of you. You're graduating from high school and about to enter into a new phase of your life. You will encounter difficult times. Let God be your guide and everything will be alright. Enjoy this moment and make a wonderful memory for yourself.

With love,

Mom, Tara, and Keith

Brandy Cline

We are so proud of what you have accomplished. Stay focused, and you'll achieve your goals.

Love,

Mom, Dad, and Brittney

Boy have you made your family so proud
Right from kindergarten through high school
Achieved goals we could have never imagined
Not one challenge has set you back
Don't ever think your dreams can't come true
You are in control of whatever you decide you want to do

M

Michelle Swan

Congratulations! You did it!!! We are so very proud of you, your extraordinary personality and all your accomplishments. You have grown from the beautiful happy little girl with the many contagious sweet smiles into an independent and very practical woman, full of enthusiasm about your convictions, yet still somewhat uncertain about yourself and your future. And, as you celebrate your graduation from high school, moved on to college and experience a world full of opportunities opening up to you, develop your talents and take advantage of all he endless possibilities that lie ahead of you. We wish you lots of luck!

Just remember to always believe in yourself, and don't forget that we will always be here for you.

With lots of love,

Mom & Dad

Congratulations! You survived. Of course, there were never any doubts (well maybe only one or two). You have been the bright spot in all our lives. Your charming ways have never failed to leave us smiling and laughing (we swear it was never at you). We look forward to watching your future unfold. It's hard to believe that the little girl we brought home from the hospital, in the blink of an eye, has grown into a beautiful young woman. Watching you grow up over the years, we have seen many sides of you from soccer star, to three-point queen, to two-time state guard champion. As wonderful as you have been in all of these, we know that your future holds many great opportunities and successes. We will always be proud of you. We love you very much!

Our Angel,

You have always inspired us with your determination...you set the highest of goals and achieve them! From the time you could walk, you have been a planner and a do'er always giving your personal best. You are so strong, so very unique...always marching to the beat of your own drum, never succumbing to peer-pressure, and never following the crowd. You are a wonderful daughter and a loyal friend with a bright smile that lights up a room! You are our little flag-flippin, sabre-soarin, rifle-rippin child. We are proud of you...we love you! You will be happy and successful...you are "The Intimidator".

Love,

You have grown into a beautiful young woman, and we are so proud of you. You have come so far in four short years. As a freshman, you may have doubted your ability to excel in high school, but we never did.

Along the way, you have learned many valuable lessons that will stay with you for a lifetime. That hard work does pay off, and you can reach your goals! We love you very much and will always be there for you. The most important thing to remember is that God loves you, and He does answer prayers.

You are a dedicated and loving person. You have earned the right to attend I.U., and we have no doubt that your success will continue in college.

Love and prayers always,

Mom, Dad, Mandy, Dusty, and Angie

Let me see...

Speech team, Actor, Award winning newspaper writer and page designer, Newspaper editor, National Merit Scholar, Ambassador, Political activist...

There's a lot there and even more not included. But the title I like best is daughter. It has been such a unique experience to teach you and to see you sitting at your editor's desk several hours a day, you and Ben that is. It is an experience most parents don't get. I know I have been lucky to spend time with you that is usually reserved only for friends, lucky to be part of this aspect of your life. In a way it has made up for the parts I could not be involved in.

Now, as you go off to college to explore your future, I hope you remember this time also as being special and take me with you. Although I will miss you, I will always see the baby asleep in my lap and the young woman writing at the editor's desk.

Love,
Dad

Class of 2005,

Would you be a different person today if you hadn't gone to this high school and experienced the things you did? After four years at Warren Central, you might not be completely prepared for the world outside of Warren's boundaries, but you are who you are today, at least in part, because of the choices you made here. Choices. You've all had to make them. Some of them were difficult, some were made without question, and some were dependent on others around you. Now you must make a choice about your future. Before you run out and take on the world of tomorrow, take a moment and let this time, this place and the tradition you are a part of sink in. Drawing from your experiences at Warren will help you make the important choices that will lead you through the rest of your lives.

Thank you for letting me be part of your senior year. You have brought smiles to my face at the exact moments I needed them (not to mention a few frowns and gray hairs that I don't need). May your futures be filled with laughter, love, peace, and happiness.

Love,
Ms. Widgren

You've made it through a lot of life tests in your first 18 years, and you still have a wonderful outlook. You have more compassion and loyalty than most men learn in a lifetime. You're my sunshine on rainy days, and your laugh turns my tears into smiles. I can't imagine my life without you. You are my inspiration. Always stay honest, caring, and positive. Don't ever change- you have a beautiful soul. I know you will be a success at whatever you do.

Love always,
Mom

Students make their own cheer block at the state championship game. some guys dressed in the cheerleading uniforms to show their school spirit, while others painted their chests and sported their warren wear.

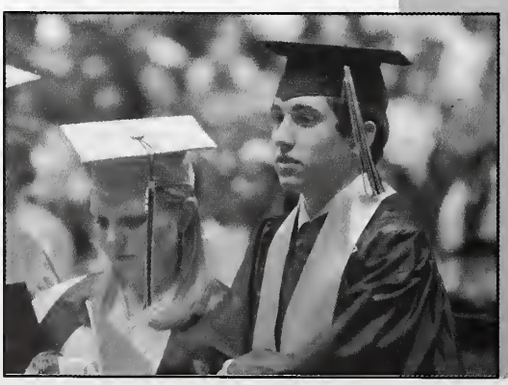
Seniors Jason Delay and Trent Hagerty show their pride in the Warriors by dressing up at the football games and sitting in the student section. Jason Delay made a point to dress up in his Warrior wear at every game to help show his school spirit stood out among the rest.

Algebra/Pre-Cal teacher Mr. Williams writes on the board during his 7th period class. Mr. Williams taught in Warren Township for 40 years and was one of several teachers who retired.

During Warren Township Clean up day, helpers take a brake to get something to eat. Many warriors helped out in the clean up to get points for Student Council as well as to show their pride in Warren Township.

Members of the 5A state football championship team come together and celebrate their victory against Ft. Wayne Snider. The team held up the tradition of Warrior dominance.

Kristin English and Michael Falls stand and wait for their turn to walk up to the stage and hear their names called at graduation. Graduates waited four long years to hear their name called on graduation night.



In the end.

As the 2004-2005 school year has come and gone, the same universal thought will remain with every Warrior, "tradition never graduates."

During spirit week, and every other day at Warren Central, Warriors celebrated their Warrior Spirit by dressing up in black and gold to show the continuing tradition of school spirit.

GQE, ACT and SAT tests all changed to different formats, but even though it was challenge, warriors maintained the tradition of excellence.

The Student Council collected 25,001 cans of food for hungry families and the bands, choirs and orchestras all placed within the top ensembles in the state, proving to be better than the rest and showing Warriors have a tradition of commitment.

From the back-to-back football State Championships, as well as state championships in Guard and, of course, that bittersweet loss at the state wrestling meet, the sports at Warren held strong while they competed for the tradition.

And with amazing leader in the class councils and everyday leaders among the student body, every student, teacher, and administrator displayed the tradition to connect.

Whether celebrating, being challenged, showing commitment, competing or connecting, Warriors proved that although seniors graduate, tradition never does.

Colophon.

650 copies of the 68th volume of the Wigwam were printed by Herff Jones. Yearbooks were sold at an "early-bird" price of $40, a regular price of $45 and a final price of $50 in the late sale. Cathy Wines was the Herff Jones representative. Mark Haab served as the Yearbook advisor and Publication director. Tony Burchett was the principal. Brandy Cline served as yearbook editor-in-chief. The book was printed on 80 pound matte paper and all page layouts were created with Adobe InDesign software and designed by the Wigwam Staff using Macintosh G4 and eMac computers.

Photography-

Most photos were taken by staff photographers using a Nikon D100, Minolta Dimage 7, and Nikon Coolpix 5700. Prestige, our official school photographers, provided sports group pictures and some special event coverage.

Typography-

Headline fonts were from the Opus family while the accent script font was Mistral. Body copy was set in Baskerville 10 point, and captions were in Opus 9 point.

Cover-

The initial cover was designed by Brandy Cline and Jessica Allen (associate editor) at Ball State Summer Workshops to carry out the theme of Warren's School spirit and tradition. Black, gold, and white were used to emphasize school colors, and we used an English Linen texture.

Workshops-

Students attended Ball State Summer Workshops, Ball State's J-Day, and the JEA/NSPA National Convention in Atlanta, where the staff received a 10th place award in Best in Show for the 2003-2004 yearbook.
